A CORRECTION:

On page 14 of our May issue, in a review of the recent English furore over homosexuality we referred to "the Bishop of Peterborough's anti-vice campaign." We are informed that this characterization was quite inaccurate—that the campaign, which had nothing to do with homosexuality, was "for the promotion of education for marriage and family life."

Our source was the January 25th, 1954 issue of the London DAILY MIRROR, which used the term "anti-vice campaign." Our informant adds that "the popular press is not always the best source of information upon this or other topics."

Also our informant questions the authenticity of some of the historical researches of Havelock Ellis, the source for statements about the Norman Kings on page 5 of the May issue. Certainly, much more thorough research is needed on the role of homosexuals in history.
