Joy to the [Gay] World

Showtime offers up holiday delight with debut of 22-episode Queer As Folk chat

It couldn't have been wrapped in a big package and tied with a fancy bow to be a nicer holiday gift for gay and lesbian people everywhere. We're talking, of course, about the debut of Queer As Folk, the racy but true-to-life queer series debuting Sunday on Showtime. For those few darlings still living in the QAF Dark Ages, the American series is modeled (but not parroted) from the British series of the same name that aired on the BBC's innovative Channel 4 a few years back. The Brit original featured a group of twenty- and thirtysomething gay boys, and a lesbian or two thrown in for good measure, along with (gasp) a 15-year-old boy. And get this. They had sex (gasp, gasp). They did drugs (gasp, gasp gasp).

But guess what? After the British public got over its initial shock, the series settled into the category every producer dreams of — controversial, cutting-edge, but P-O-P-U-L-A-R.

Now comes the Americanized version, thanks to We'll-show-HBO-and-those-Sex-in-the-City-girls Showtime. To be sure, gay critics and cinema fans groaned when they heard about Showtime's project. The British series has seen plenty of airtime stateside, becoming the darling of the gay and lesbian film festival circuit in the U.S. Everyone thought Showtime wouldn't have the balls to do it right. That they'd clean up all the sex. That

Well, they were wrong. The American QAF does up the age of the teen from 15 to 17, but that's about it. The question now is, how many queers will get nervous about the idea of mom and pop watching this show? Better steer 'em back to Will&Grace if you can't handle them knowing what you really do in bed.

General-circulation critics seem to like the show, too. Newsweek gave the series a rave, praising its "sex, wicked humor, complicated friendships," and adding, "It's the first time gay men are not apologizing for who they are by making themselves eunuchs or victims or clowns." And Time magazine's critic calls the show "solid and often impressive" and "pleasingly candy-colored and frenetic."

Perhaps QAF executive producer Ron Cowen, who's openly gay, says it best, with an appropriately queenly slap at that certain NBC Thursday night sitcom: "There are more gay characters on TV now, but they're mostly clowns [read: Jack] or eunuchs [read: Will].

Not anymore. Thanks, few years, and Americans shinnied up to Irish lead singer Stephen Gately during the end credits of Billy Elliot as he belts out the upbeat anthem "I Believe." But now there's word Gately's getting the boot from his U.K. label, Polydor, barely a year after he came out. The Sun, a London tabloid, reports that Polydor will cut the longtime Boyzone lead singer loose after his debut solo album, New Beginning, begins to fade. The tab quotes an unnamed source at the label saying that while Gately is a "hard worker," his singles have been disappointments on the charts — peaking at No. 3 and No. 11. Polydor denies it's prepar-

"Queer as Folk is not just the first TV series where all the major characters are gay, it's the first to treat gay people simply as people."

— Newsweek

"Housewives in Peoria are going to see that and say, 'That's not bad!'"

— Michelle Clunie on the Queer as Folk sex scenes between Brian and Justin.

"The unavoidable focus on QAF's sex shouldn't obscure its nuanced picture of gay life. The central characters — Brian, Michael, Emmett and Ted — are, like the women of Sex and the City, a cross section of urban types."

— James Poniewozik, Time

"The sex is not insignificant. While it's never gratuitous (or full-frontal), QAF is not shy about showing people kissing and moving in ways never seen on TV."

— Newsweek

"We're not in business to offend anybody."

— Showtime chairman Matt Blank

"The American Queer as Folk takes more risks than the British version: more sex, more graphic language. It's also richer. Showtime has spent more than $1 million per episode — about standard for a network drama — and hired Richard Kramer (Once and Again) and Jason Schafer (Trick) to write scripts that are both funnier and softer than the British show."

— Newsweek

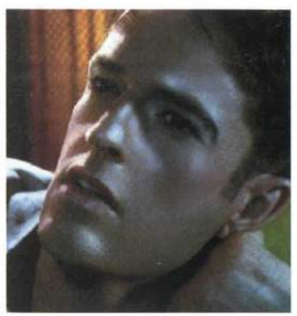

"When I read the script, I went, 'Send me in, coach, because I want to be a part of this one.'"

— *Sharon Gless (Cagney and Lacey), who plays one of the QAF moms*

"As soon as they say cut, you spit. You want to go to a strip bar or touch the makeup girls. You feel dirty. It's a tough job."

— Actor Chris Potter, who plays QAF's David

"If it were just gay people, your average straight audience would just go, it's a gay show, it doesn't concern me. The nice thing about this show is that, after about 10 minutes, you get so involved with the people, you forget they're all gay."

Gay actor Rupert Everett's name has been floated for the role of Captain Hook in a new big-screen version of Peter Pan. He could have the inside track since the he's already worked with director P.J. Hogan in My Best Friend's Wedding. An added plum for Rupert? Humpy Australian cutie Heath Ledger is being sought for the leading role. That would make it an effortless task for Everett since he'd be chasing Ledger's Peter during the entire movie.

Madonna's finally broken her silence about her wedding plans with Brit hottie Guy Ritchie. She plans to marry Rocco's dad sometime next year — not next month in a Scottish castle. The couple plan to reside in London, where Rocco and his half-sister, Lourdes, will receive "an English education," the former Material Girl says.

Attention, Buffy fans. For those of you who can't get enough of Buffy The Vampire Slayer, the fantasy program featuring ambiguous sexuality and and there's a popularity contest allowing viewers to vote for the episode with the most bite. Our favorites? "Bad Girls," "Where the Wild Things Are" and "Never Kill a Boy on the First Date." (Everyone knows the third date is the best time for *that).

With Sonny Bono planted and tearfully eulogized, Cher has struck up an even stranger relationship with a Republican — Bob Dole. The unlikely alliance was formed when Dole called to complain about a potentially offensive lyric on her new, Internet-sold album, not.com.mercial: "The times we live in have less value than Bob Dole's useless arm." Although Cher says she always considered the former Senate chief and presidential contender to be mean and nasty, he turned out to be very funny. Now Cher's decided to donate her tune "Fit to Fly," about her war-vet grandfather, to the World War II Memorial Campaign, of which Dole is chairman.

Quick bits: Leonardo DiCaprio is being sought to play the good-looking young dandy with a dark secret in a new film version of The Picture of Dorian Gray. Watch it, Leo. All that late night partying can add years to your face . . . . Pre-release buzz? It's the best movie with the worst name. Answer? Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. And if you thought all martial-arts films were write-offs, just remember that Ang Lee is directing this one . . . . Not so dumb? Dumb and Dumber 2 isn't going to get a remake after all from South Park's openly-gay creators Trey Parker and Matt Stone. After signing on Wuuurked! Yes, they did! The guys at Groovilicious have outdone themselves once again with Partytime 2001. The second installment in this series comes packed full of juicy audible morsels, dripping and oozing with much drama. A value-packed double CD, Partytime 2001 offers a bevy of the year's biggest dance-floor delights. It's all there — big room progressive tracks by producers/artists such as Razor N' Guido, JS-16, Jonah, DJ Jurgen, Zombie Nation, ATB, Darude and more.

Then there are the divas! (I'm sick of that word, but it works.) How about that Shannon getting' her groove back on with an all-new remix of the classic "Give Me Tonight?" Oh, yes! Then there's Amber with "Above The Clouds," which was one of the biggest circuit party records of the year. Now don't be "nervous," because, yes, Kim English's "Missing You" and Byron Stingily's "U Turned Me" are also included. And then there's Strictly Rhythm's own diva-in-residence, Ultra Naté, serving up her new chart-topping single "Desire," Eartha Kitt's new rendition of "Where Is My Man" — and let's not forget about "Kiss" from those Vengaboys, not to mention Fragma's "Toca's Miracle," which is steadily getting radio adds day by day. Oh, and another thing. Make sure you check out "With You" by Nomad DJ Escape, this double CD set sets itself ahead of the pack of dance compilations. But don't take my word for it. Grab a copy and see how fast you feel like dancing!

Not that were ever one to gossip, but we hear that there is a new Kraftwerk single on the horizon. Actually, we're sure that it's coming, but we just haven't heard it yet. But it's Kraftwerk, so we know it's going to be great. This will be their first single in about a decade, so we're pretty excited about it. All we know is that it's coming out on a UK label called Kling-lang, it's a double-pack and it's got loads of mixes by the likes of top progressive punters Orbital, Francois Kevorkian and more! Sounds promising to me.

Former C&C Music Factory lead singer Zelma Davis has just released a hot single entitled "Power."

The new Maddie single is really Tell Me." Really fabulous remixes by Thunderpuss, "Humpty" Vission and Tracy Young make for unbridled, full-throttled, dance-floor glory! That Tracy mix really kicks ass!

Another single that's really quite tasty is Zelma Davis' "Power." You'll remember Zelma as the former lead singer of C&C Music Factory. This amped-up, diva-driven morsel comes complete with a Junior Vasquez remix for your gay nerves. The record was previously out on Bash Records, but rumor has it that it's out now on the Jellybean label. We hear that there is also an album in the works. Can't wait!

Okay, fellas, it's that time again. We're compiling our list of the Top 25 Dance Singles of the Showtime doesn't shy away from gay sex in long-awaited American version of Queer As Folk

by steven lindsey

Imagine a world where Showtime ran every network. There'd be Touched by an Angel with an episode on heavenly rim jobs, Monica would frequently lick Rachel's breasts on Friends and maybe we'd finally see where Everybody Loves Raymond. Hell, Martha Stewart might even devote a week on how to ejaculate in decorative patterns. But until that day we can be thankful that Showtime has the ready-to-suck balls to put the sexually explicit Queer As Folk on the air.

Surely by now you've seen at least one episode of the much-praised British version of QAF, or at least talked to someone who has. When the buzz first started up about a stateside remake, the question on everyone's lips was: Will there be as much nudity and candid discussion about gay sex? The answer is a loud, flamboyant, throw-your-hands-in-the-air yes! And best of all, the men in the new version are a helluva lot hotter than Let's just say, this might not be the series you watch with your mom so that she can finally see the "real" gay culture. Unless she's got a hefty estate, of course.

The ensemble cast is composed of relative unknowns, keeping any one character from being the star. Okay, there's pseudo-celeb cutie Hal Sparks (of E! Talk Soup fame), but the only indication of his supposed rank over the others is his complete lack of nude scenes. (Maybe he thinks he's Sarah Jessica). At any rate, you'll soon learn that each of the main characters has a juicy story to tell.

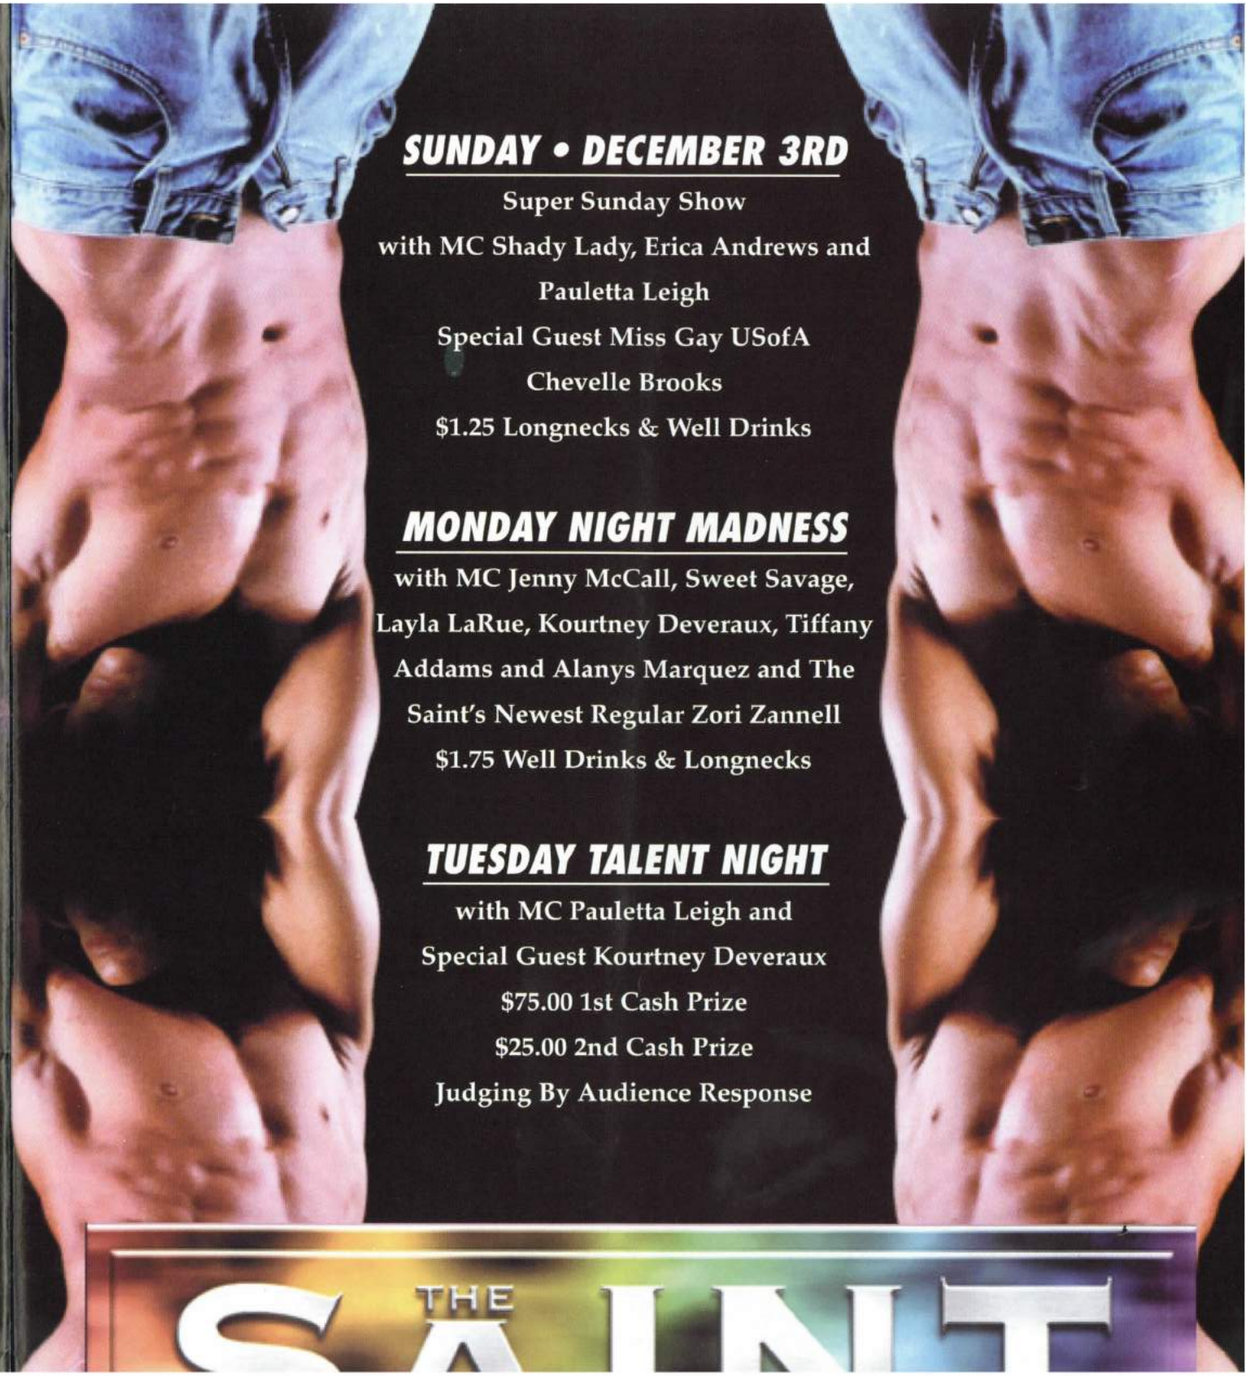

Brian (Gale Harold) is the perennial gay slut. He's disarmingly gorgeous with a killer body (so expect lots of nude scenes from him), but he's so full of himself, he can't commit to any one man for longer than it takes to climax. This is much to the dismay of 17-year-old first-timer Justin (Randy Harrison), who falls head-over-giving-head in love with Brian after a begin the long journey to acceptance right away.

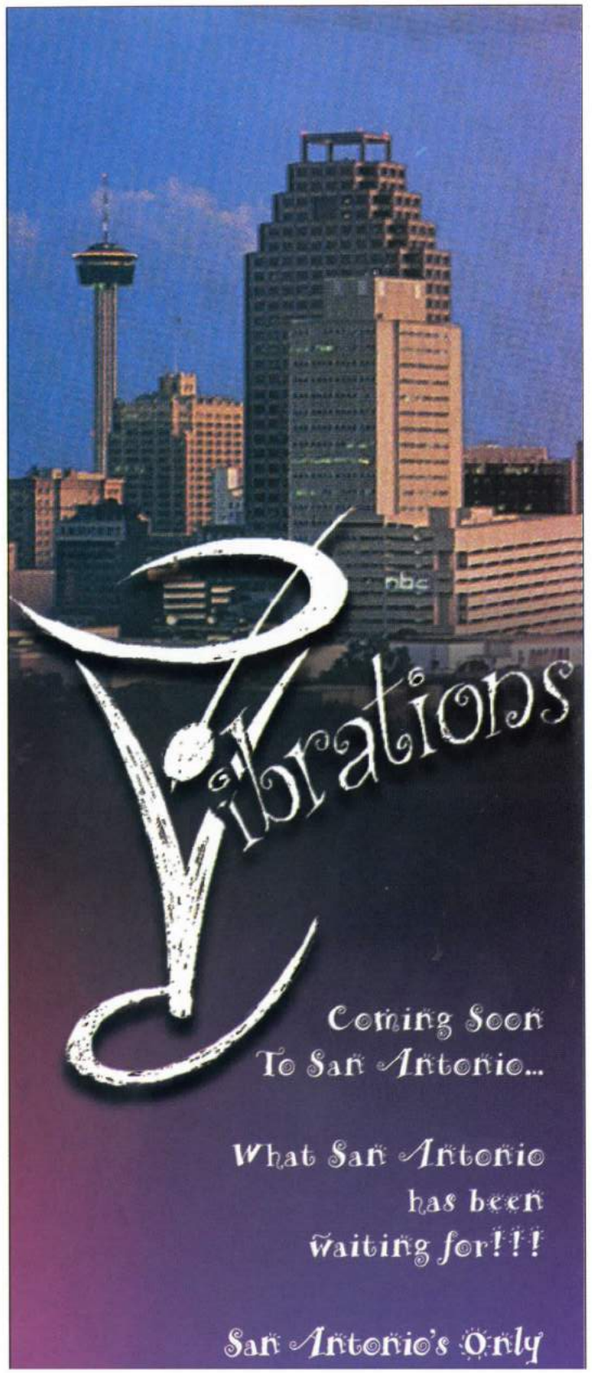

Naturally, Brian can't be too concerned about having had sex with a child when he has one of his own awaiting him at the hospital. Yes, the gay plot twist from which I can't escape is present in QAF, too. Brian is the artificial inseminator for Lindsay (Thea Gill) and Melanie (Michelle Clunie), who dream of their own Two Mommies book one day. And because there always has to be a bitter lesbian, Melanie steps up to the plate with frequent displays of hatred toward Brian.

Adding a bit of stability and likability to the fey fraternity is Michael (Sparks), a comic book nerd with his fair share of boyish sex appeal. Mikey's repressed desire for Brian, his childhood friend and the first boy to "hold" his you-know-what, is a source of frustration in more ways than one. There's sexual tension aplenty between these two, even though Michael's rainbow-flag-wearin' mother, Debbie, a waitress at the local gay diner. Naturally, you'll see many bonding moments between Debbie and Justin's mom, Jennifer, as they compete to be the most understanding of their gay sons.

Rounding out the cast is Peter Paige as Emmett, the only one of the friends who's truly at ease with his homosexuality. It's all about the tight-fitting clothes and catty remarks for this queen, and it couldn't be better for us as viewers. Emmett is pretty much the polar opposite of the downtrodden Ted (Scott Lowell), whose lack of self-esteem is the real reason he turns off other men. Despite his self-doubt, he perpetuates his loneliness by constantly seeking young, beautiful men who shoot him down relentlessly. He's the neurotic finishing touch to an already interesting group of diverse gay men.

Oh, and did I mention that all this is set in Pittsburgh? Yes, the gay mecca you're constantly read in San Francisco, West Hollywood or Manhattan. While acceptance appears to be the norm in the QAF-colored Pittsburgh, its gritty underbelly is bound to show itself in the near future.

So, now you're probably wondering exactly what I — dreaded hater of The Broken Hearts Club — really think about Queer As Folk. I thought you'd never ask.

To start out simply, let's just say I love it — but it wasn't at first sight. The first episode is an exact replica of the British version, all the way down to the blocking of some scenes. A great deal of the dialogue is stilted and unintentionally laughable. And perhaps the worst part of the whole series is the dreadful opening credits, which look like a psychedelic gay acid trip as realized by two computer geeks at a public access station.

But that's it. Those are the only flaws I could find, and you know I look hard. That's because shortly after the first two episodes (grouped together the first night), the series finds its voice. The dialogue gets better, the pacing more dramatic and the characters more detailed. Of course, since I've only seen two hours of the British series, these latter episodes I love so much could be hack jobs, too, but in this case ignorance truly is bliss. This is hands-down the new water-cooler show of the season. Everyone who's anyone will be talking about it.

And even if it is just a reworking of another country's hit show, it is definitely a landmark event in the U.S. Never has anything this side of a Ryan Idol flick shown gay sex with such blatant frankness. In fact, it almost feels like the straight world is finally being let in on our deepest, darkest secrets, although I don't think many heteros will be tuning in after Episode One. Besides, they've already got Walker, Texas Ranger anyway.

Episode Guide

Can't wait to find out what happens next? Well, rest assured I won't be revealing any major plot twists here, but at least you can get a general overview and see how the episodes rate against one another. Hell, I'll even throw in a nudity scale for those of you who really do think about sex every nine seconds.

Episode 1&2 (Grouped together for premiere). Meet the gang you'll come to know in many intimate ways. Brian beds down teenage Justin, while across town, Lindsay the lesbian gives birth to Brian's son. Michael goes out with his straight co-workers from Qmart who are trying to set him up with a girl. This interesting-but-slow episode gets the series off to a rocky start.
Grade: B-
Nudity: ★★★★★

Episode 3. The pace quickens as the actors and writers get more comfortable with their roles. Michael continues to pretend to be straight for the sake of his reputation at work.

Episode 4. Justin's mom discovers his secret while he turns his attentions to the hot guys in his high-school locker room. Ted's secret love is revealed without his knowledge. Increased sexual tension between Michael and Brian further complicates their friendship. Debbie and Jennifer bond over their gay sons.
Grade: A
Nudity: ★★★★

Episode 5. Michael continues his Qmart charade, even as he pursues David (Chris Potter), a gorgeous chiropractor ready to straighten him out in a different way. Justin slowly accepts his mom's acceptance. Brian proves how far he'll go to land an account at his ad agency.
Grade: A-

Episode 6. Everyone to the Gay and Lesbian Center! Ted and Emmett attend a "Date Bait" meeting at the GLC so that Ted can find a man. Lindsay discovers Justin's drawing ability and features his drawings in a community show.

Lots of us drink "sports" drinks for a variety of reasons. Some provide us with a heavy dose of protein — so much that, in fact, it would be impossible to obtain the same amounts at one time from real food (like meat). These drinks are filled with whey protein, synthesized from cows' milk. Others give us the carbohydrate stack we need for a pre-endurance workout. And still others are so called "fat busters," glucose replacers, etc.

But the drinks (Red Bull, Ripped Force and others) and herbal supplements that are marketed as "quicker-picker-uppers" (Ripped Fuel and Thermodrene and others) are the ones we need to be extra careful about, according to new research.

Next time, if you read the label on the speed drink you are about to consume or herbal speed pills you are going to swallow, you probably will see the words "ephedra" or "ma huang" listed in the ingredients. Both are one and the same.

Approximately 12 million Americans are using ephedra, an herbal stimulant, for bodybuilding and also for weight loss. But use of this herb has been linked to stroke, heart attacks, seizures and death (in otherwise healthy young people), researchers say. And researchers suggest in a study, published recently in The New England Journal of Medicine, that the risks far outweigh the benefits of using this supplement. Since the mid-1990s, 54 deaths and 1,000 reports of complications have been linked to ephedra.

"They're uncommon events, but they are serious," says Dr. Neal

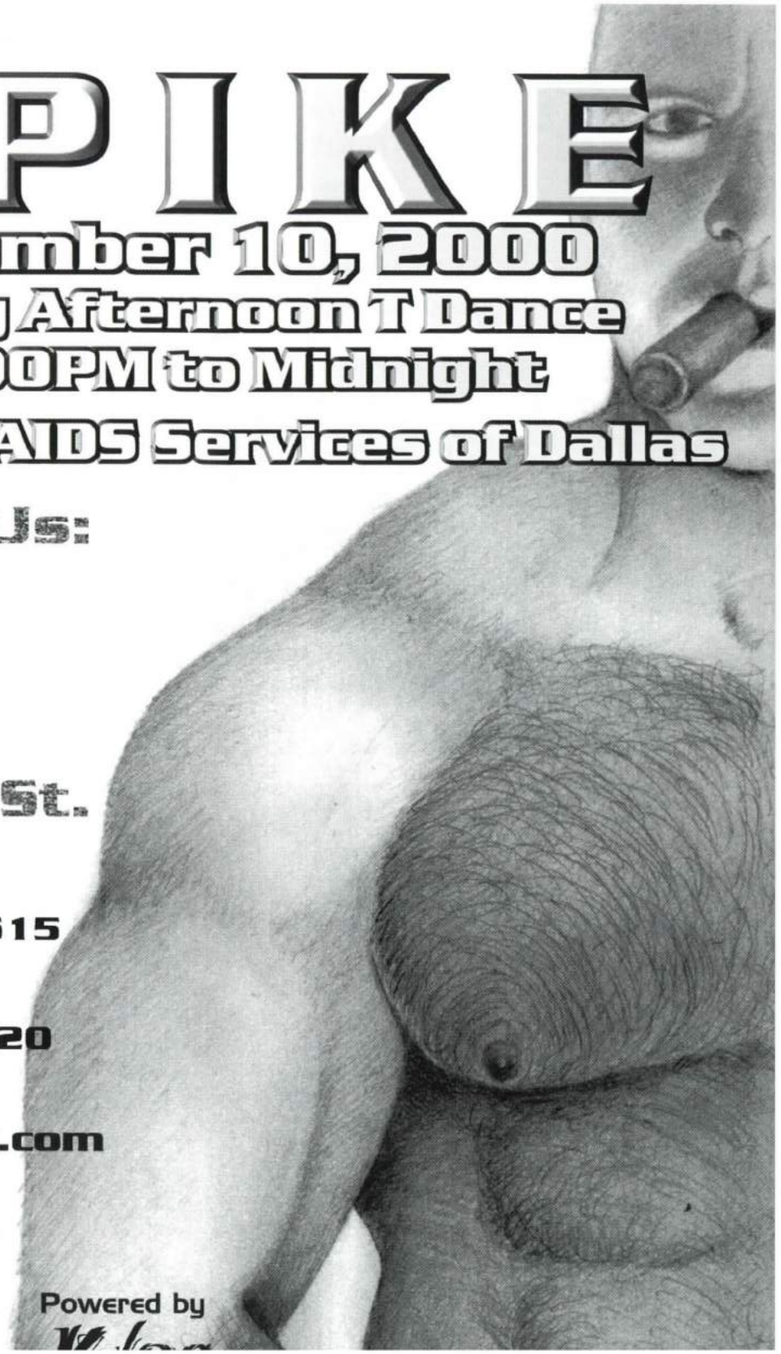

California at San Francisco. "The substance is unreasonably hazardous as marketed."

Benowitz' research, commissioned by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, noted that most of the deaths and complications appeared in healthy young people. Some of these people had been taking ephedra for just days or weeks.

Dr. Benowitz and collegues reviewed the records from 140 ephedra users who suffered complications in 1997 through 1999. Their review of the data showed that about one-third of the problems users experienced were "definitely" or "probably" caused by ephedra use. Another one-third of complications were "possibly" caused by ephedra use.

It must be pointed out that pre-existing health issues could have caused the complications.

Dr. Steven Schneider, an endocrinologist at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey, said the study provides strong evidence that ephedra caused the side effects in many of the patients. But Schneider added that there was not enough evidence yet to justify a ban on the substance.

"Many people have no idea they are taking it," because the label is often incomplete or misleading, Schneider said. Also, research has shown that ephedra dosage varies in pills than what is written on the label. Schneider and Benowitz stress that ephedra should not be taken by anyone who is pregnant or has a history of heart disease, stroke, psychiatric disorders, asthma, thyroid or kidney disease, diabetes or seizures.

And if you are taking other medications, please consult your doctor first before taking anything, even items marketed as herbal stimulants. To do otherwise could be very costly.

Remember in 1998, when the then-home run king, Mark McGuire, admitted to using a supplement that actually helped him grow muscle? It was androstenedione, sold under the brand name Androstene. He said it helped him achieve his record-setting 70 home runs in that season. But his use of the substance probably had nothing to do with his on-field success and could very well have been a cover for potential steroid use. Here's the latest information on the andro.

If you are 30 to 56 years old, use of the supplement androstenedione may not help raise testosterone levels enough to trigger muscle building in men. And it may, in fact, hurt you by lowering the good cholesterol, HDL.

In a study recently published in the Journal of Clinical at all, it is extremely weak. I would be surprised if we could measure an increase in size or strength."

King and his colleagues looked at blood samples taken once a week over 28 days from 27 men who took 100 milligrams of andro three times a day. The men on andro developed increases of 40 to 50 percent in free testosterone levels in their blood, the study found.

However, earlier research indicated that men have to more than double their levels of this active form of testosterone before supplementation can help them build more muscle.

In a similar study, men 35 to 65 years in age showed no benefit from andro even when they did high-intensity strength training. The men who took 200 milligrams a day over the 12-week program had an increase in testosterone in the first two weeks, but then returned to baseline afterward.

Instead of muscle building, the men in the study got some hormonal and cholesterol negatives. Levels of dihydrotestosterone, which can cause the prostate to enlarge, rose by 110 percent. Levels of HDL, which fight the build-up of artery-clogging plaques, went down by 10 percent.

"That's not a huge effect, but it's likely to be significant," King said.

The federal government is trying to decide whether to regulate androstenedione as a controlled substance. But to be listed as such, it would have to find that andro actually helps build muscle. In every study to date, that information just isn't available. Andro does, however, have the negative ability to raise levels of estradiol, which can make male breast tissue grow. And its negative effects on cholesterol are powerful arguments for making the supplement pre-

Quick reviews of three videos in current release

It's like when you realize that last call is approaching and you haven't firmed up a prospect for the evening. The year is drawing to a close, and my desk is piled high with videos released this year that, for one reason or another, haven't gotten a mention in this space. So here are quick reviews of three that have caught my eye for one reason or another.

Damnation: Hell in Leather

This release from All Worlds Video has a military setting but a leather theme. Young Captain Lucas — handsome, hunky blond Cameron Sage — has taken up a new post, yet there's a dark mystery surrounding the departure of his predecessor, Capt. Clark. Sage discovers Clark's diary and pursues the case.

Come to find out, there's a secretive leather sex ring in operation at the base. Four of the five sex scenes occur in dungeon-like settings, and two of these are especially notable — scene two for the play with increasingly large toys, and scene 4 for the hot wax. What's unusual about this hot wax scene is its realism. The desires, this story turn won't satisfy too many. Safe, sane and consensual goes out the window with this bizarre ending.

But that hot wax scene is a standout.

The General's Son

Another story set on a military base — with Anthony DeAngelo again serving as the base commander — has a lieutenant facing personal issues, and he regrets that his son can't come to him with his problems. So he sends his sergeant to check things out.

There's also a barracks orgy scene in which four of the leather players descend on young Capt. Lucas for his "initiation." The play is well-filmed, with standout Sam Crockett proving himself quite a deep-throater before he assumes his traditional top role.

Capt. Lucas finally confronts the base commander (Anthony DeAngelo), who admits that the hapless Capt. Lucas was not transferred from the base — he was killed by the commander, who lost his control during an S/M scene and lashed the man to death.

Although obviously pitched to those with leather and S/M is not a problem. He just has to keep it quiet. Then Morgan goes for the cute, slim, tattooed Stonie in a rousing encounter marked by an incredible cumshot by the older Morgan.

Meantime, over in the barracks, Drill Instructor Paul Morgan is giving Marine private Stonie hell for some infraction or other. Stonie quickly admits to Morgan that he's gay, and the drill instructor hauls him off. That's the cue for Stonie's two barracks mates to "do what Marines do," as one says, which in this case involves getting it on.

Once alone with Private Stonie, the drill instructor teaches the young recruit that being gay is not a problem. He just has to keep it quiet. Then Morgan goes for the cute, slim, tattooed Stonie in a rousing encounter marked by an incredible cumshot by the older Morgan.

As the sergeant pursues the general's son, he discovers quickly that the lieutenant is not working on personal problems with the chaplain — he's just getting personal as the two go at each other. The general's son, Jay Alexander, is a well-built, handsome, hunky blond Cameron Sage — has taken because of this fact and partly because his sergeant, Cameron Cruise, happens to be going down on him when he delivers the news.

Writer/director Paul Barresi ends the film with a set of amusing outtakes as the final credits roll — Morgan flubbing his lines so many times one wonders how they ever got enough useable footage, Stonie collapsing into laughter as he's being berated by his DI, and Alexander and Andrews losing their balance during intercourse on a table and giggling when they're supposed to be in the throes of passion. These outtakes make a clever, amusing and unusual end to The General's Son.

Starring Jay Alexander, Anthony DeAngelo, Cameron Cruise, Paul Morgan, Stonie, Trey Hunter, Josh Evers. Grade: B

Dirty Harry

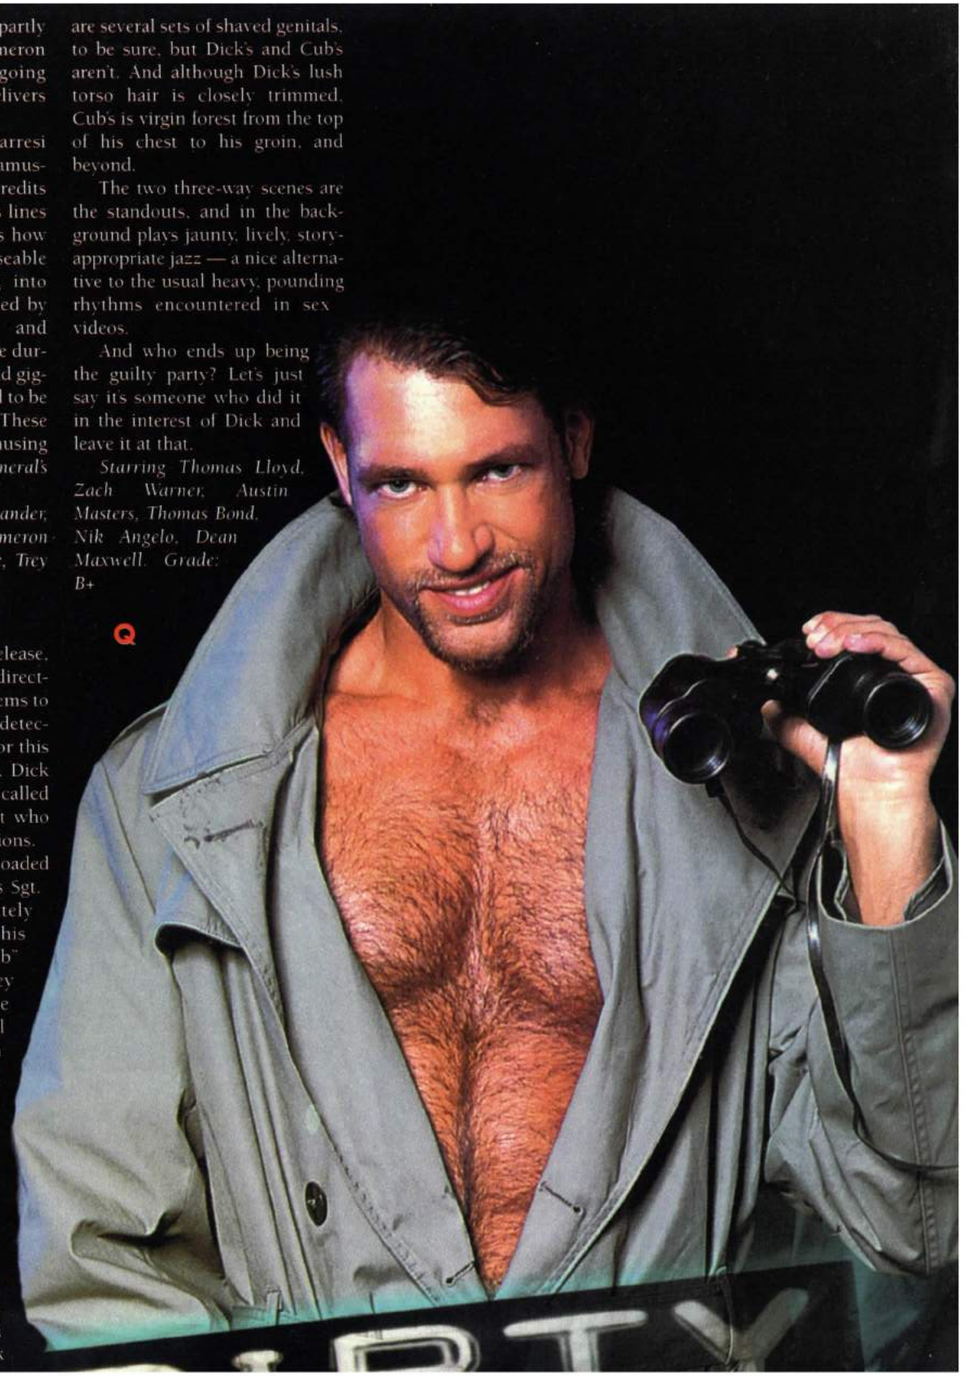

An All Worlds Video release, Dirty Harry is written and directed by Mike Donner, who seems to have pulled all the worst detective jokes in the book out for this parody of '40s sleuth films. Dick is a private dick who's been called in by a Senator to find out who videotaped his gay sex sessions.

So Dick — who's so loaded with corny jokes he makes Sgt. Joe Friday look absolutely Shakespearean — takes his assistant Cubidenski ("Cub" for short) in hand as they attempt to track down the perp. We see the original Senatorial sex session replayed on videotape, which actually is a pretty good three-way. Then Dick has his way with Cub in the office. There's more fun and games as Cub goes undercover to the gym. Then, in a climactic moment, the fourth and final sex scene unfolds as Dick thinks he's found his man — but it's actually a pair of lovers who think are several sets of shaved genitals, to be sure, but Dick's and Cub's aren't. And although Dick's lush torso hair is closely trimmed, Cub's is virgin forest from the top of his chest to his groin, and beyond.

The two three-way scenes are the standouts, and in the background plays jaunty, lively, story-appropriate jazz — a nice alternative to the usual heavy, pounding rhythms encountered in sex videos.

And who ends up being the guilty party? Let's just say it's someone who did it in the interest of Dick and leave it at that.

Starring Thomas Lloyd, Zach Warner, Austin Masters, Thomas Bond, Nik Angelo, Dean Maxwell. Grade: B+

Sagittarius (November 22-December 21) Well, if Leo's luck is held in a 5-gallon drum, then a 10-gallon size is needed for yours. What an incredible energy cycle. As a wise sage once said, you could step in poop and come up with a gold mine. Of course, you always give a portion of what you earn or win to those less fortunate.

Capricorn (December 22-January 19) Being frustrated where love is concerned is a real bummer. Just think how your other half feels right now. Just how many of those dinner dates have you broken lately? We know that career comes first, but it's putting a strain on that love match. Tend to this or you could end up flying solo.

Aquarius (January 20-February 18) The two of you have been getting along so well that it seems inevitible that you'd eventually move in together. The problem seems to be that neither one wants to move from his perfect pad. If this is the case, then it would be wise to continue shuttling back and forth until an agreement is finally reached.

Pisces (February 19-March 20) We've heard of being prepared, but having those bags packed a full three weeks before the actual trip is a bit much. Stop chomping at the bit and get back to work — of which there's plenty, by the way. You should start with that mess of a financial statement. Take all the time necessary to get it just right.

Aries (March 21-April 19) Although frustrations on the job could have you climbing the walls, it's really not the best time to be making noise. You'll be feeling much more appreciated by early next week. That investment you were so wary of seems to have paid off quite nicely. Set aside Sunday for you and your sweetie.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) Talk about work marathons! If keeping very busy and being productive were on your wish list, we're happy to inform you they've been granted. There won't be a moment to spare right up through Christmas Eve (but you can squeeze in a night out). Try not to go completely hog wild when gift shopping.

Gemini (May 21-June 21) Planetary influences appear to be smiling on you all week long, Gemmy. For starters, that financial boost you've been expecting has arrived, and the timing just couldn't be better. Then there's that idea you've been working on for a new business venture. It looks like a real winner, but it could use some fine tuning.

Cancer (June 22-July 22) Your physical energy level still isn't quite back up to par, so we suggest keeping a low profile until Friday night, just to be on the safe side. A newfound friend is really someone you can rely on. Triple-check any documents that require your signature. Don't allow that pushy older relative to intimidate you.

Leo (July 23-August 22) If luck were handed out in vials like cologne, then you'd be carrying a 5-gallon drum around all day. As the gamblers say, what a roll you're on, Leo. Hardly anything can go wrong this week, unless of course you tempt fate by being reckless. (We don't see that, though.) Help out a close friend who's in a bad way.

Virgo (August 23-September 22) Persistence and plain old hard work continue to pay off for you, Virgo. The week looks pleasant but uneventful, especially on the social front. Of course, since you aren't the "party animal" type, most invitations are turned down. With the holidays coming up, you can't do this without offending people.

Libra (September 23-October 22) This is a good time to make a fresh start (or two). If there's someone who's due an apology, gladly make it. An old friend whom you cut off contact with would welcome you back with open arms, and a heart to match. It will be a fast-moving few days and surprisingly enriching as well. Savor this time!

Scorpio (October 23-November 21) Although the last couple of weeks have been a bit disappointing for you, we sense that is all about to change, Scorp. The high tide (which brings good luck) is due any time now. Stop being so serious, though. Major lightening up is what's needed now. You're supposed to laugh, dance, sing and play.
