Gay concert tour "postponed" as Sinead O'Connor's last-minute withdrawal blamed for low ticket sales

chat

Just after Q went to press last week, with our news of Sinead O'Connor's real reason for dropping out of the Wotapalava concert series featuring gay artists (last year's "lesbian" is getting married to a newspaperman!), the Pet Shop Boys announced the "postponement" of the tour. Citing Sinead's last-minute withdrawal and "the difficulty of finding a suitable replacement with such short notice," they said they figured it "wise" to call the whole thing off but promised the tour will happen next summer.

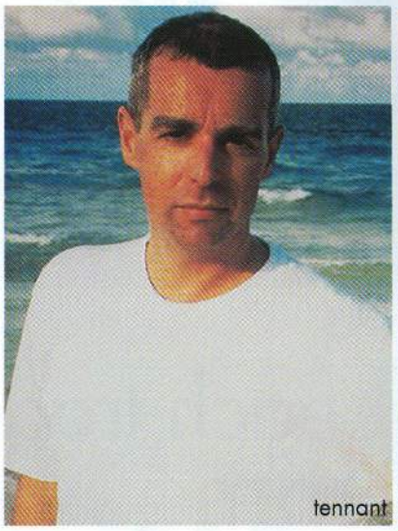

"We have made this decision with the greatest of reluctance," said Pet Shop Boy/Wotapalava creator Neil Tennant, "but it seems impossible to proceed without a complete line-up of artists. We look forward to coming to America next year."

Along with O'Connor and the Pet Shop Boys, the tour was to feature Soft Cell, The Magnetic Fields and Rufus Wainwright, as well as DJs Junior Vasquez and Danny Tenaglia. Touted as the first openly gay pop music festival to tour the U.S., Wotapalava was to play 18 North American stops beginning July 13 in Miami and culminating with three Texas dates (Dallas on August 8, San Antonio on August 10, and Houston on August 11).

Ticket refunds are available at point of purchase. If it's any consolation — and it probably isn't much — Stevie Nicks' current tour is coming to Dallas on August 3 (at the Smirnoff Music Center) and Houston on August 4 (at the Cynthia Woods Mitchell Pavilion in the Woodlands).

Rosie O'Donnell recently responded to all those tabloid photos we've been seeing of her sitting with "friend" Kelli Carpenter at ballgames.

"I live my life, they take pictures when they do," she said. "I've never denied or confirmed

"The big thing that changed was when ecstasy came along in Britain. The big gay clubs like Heaven started having mixed nights in the late '80s. anything. I've never felt the need to. They've been taking photos of me and her for many years. I don't think there will ever be some big press conference to announce anything about my private life."

O'Donnell's comments came during an interview with USA Today columnist Jeannie Williams, in which the talk show queen tried to quash a recent National Enquirer story alleging she had to fire a staff member after learning he had a child molestation record. The man was the husband of a housekeeper at her Miami home and was never on staff, she said.

"Usually I ignore [the tabloids], but after the whole Paula Poundstone thing, then they run the headline, 'Rosie Rescues Her Kids from Child Molester' — it's absurd," she said. "I never had a male nanny ... and the male nanny association of America can write me a letter saying how horribly sexist that is — I don't care. It's my own decision, for my own family."

Poundstone, who like Rosie is a comedian and a foster and adoptive mom, is scheduled to appear in court on July 30 for a preliminary hearing on charges that she committed "a lewd act on a girl under the age of 14" and that she "endangered" four other children (the details remain murky).

"I'm not trying to distance myself from her, [but] I'm totally obsessed with finding out what happened," said Rosie of the Poundstone saga.

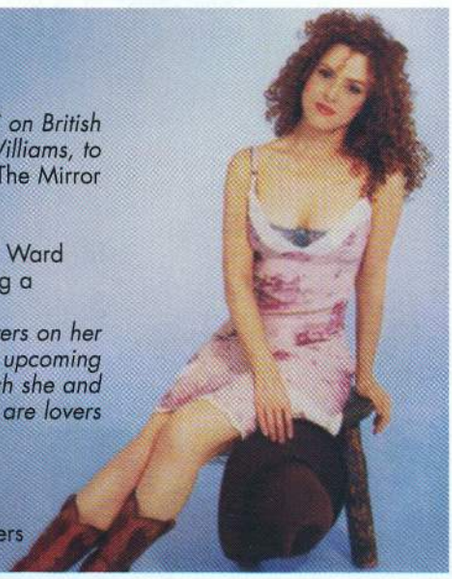

helmsley

Rosie said she called Poundstone's manager to inquire about the charges and to warn, "'Don't leave her alone.' Regardless of whether or not it's true, and I certainly hope it's not, I just want to be sure somebody is watching her, because even the accusation is horrific."

Manhattan, recently filed a $10 million lawsuit alleging "wrongful and discriminatory termination and intentional infliction of emotional distress."

According to Bell, who is openly gay, Leona is a major league homophobe, despite the fact that she seems to surround herself with gay men. Upon seeing a group of gay tourists in the hotel lobby once, says Bell, Helmsley said in a loud voice, "What are all of these gay men doing in my hotel? It's disgusting. I want it stopped."

Bell's lawsuit claims that while he was repeatedly praised for his accomplishments since his hiring in November 2000 — he was said to have raised employee morale, increased occupancy rates, upgraded guest rooms and established a data bank of repeat customers — he was fired in March, only to be begged to come back by Leona, who admitted his firing had nothing to do with his job performance. Bell says once his sexual orientation was acknowledged, he became the target of harassment and even an illegal break-in in which all of the personal belongings in his hotel room were examined.

The 80-year-old Helmsley, who served 18 months in prison on tax evasion and discrimination charges, is said to have once warned Bell to "stay away from that Miami faggot crowd," in reference to another employee's friends.

At least Bell is in good company. New York is littered with former Helmsley employees who claim Leona is gripped with an obsession to prevent any accomplished hireling from sharing her limelight. Remember, this is the woman whose own attorney once referred to her as a "bitch" in court.

Don't expect TNT's upcoming James Dean biopic to reveal much about his sexuality. Airing August 5, the movie, bearing the oh-so-creative title James Dean, stars James Franco (Freaks and Geeks) and recreates Dean's tragically short life and career.

Word is you have to really pay attention to catch the movie's limited gay innuendo. In one early scene, Dean attends a boys-only "private party" at a producer's house in order to get work. Then later in the movie, Jack Warner (played by the film's director, Mark Rydell) reprimands Dean for saying, "I'm not a homosexual, but I refuse to go through life with one hand tied behind my back."

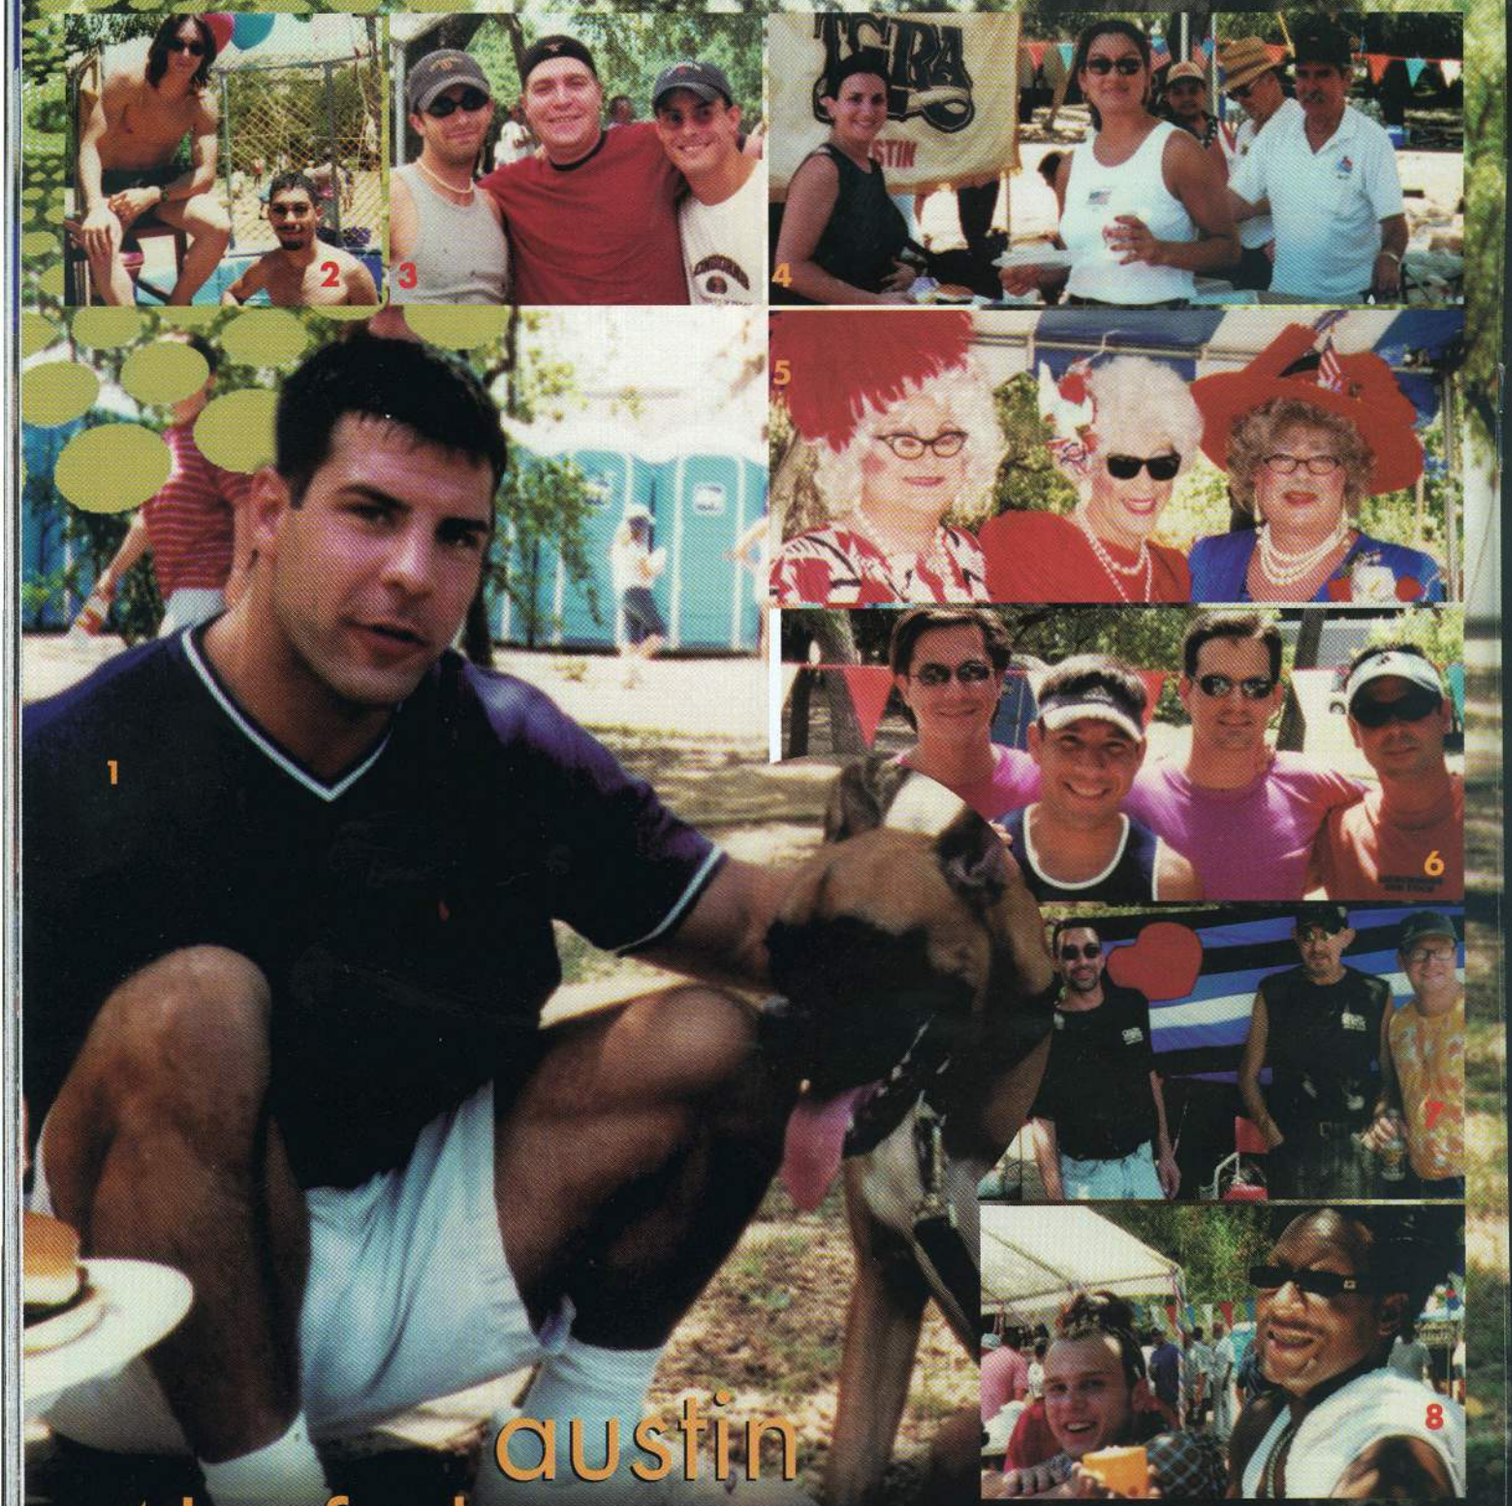

This is quite disappointing given all the recent mainstream reportage of Dean's same-sex involvements. For several years now, Dame Elizabeth Taylor has been mentioning Dean's name, along with Rock Hudson and Montgomery Clift, as one of the gay actors she worked with.

Two different sides of Madonna — her fascination with Eastern spirituality and her notorious control-freak ways — surfaced at once recently when she sent a special gift to Andrew Morton, the famed British biographer who is working on an unauthorized book about her. She reportedly mailed a Buddhist tome to Morton, along with a note saying, "This will help you and make you a better person."

Meanwhile, a European pharmaceutical company has manufactured a line of condoms emblazoned with nude pics of Madonna — the ones Playboy ran in 1985. A representative for the mega-diva reacted by saying, "The condoms were unauthorized, and we are taking the appropriate action."

Currently on the European leg of her "Drowned World" tour, Madonna apparently gives a big wink to her lesbian fans in the new show. During the last segment of the concert, she reportedly wears a traditional flamenco dress and croons "What It Feels Like For A Girl" in Spanish while flirting and doing the tango with her female dancers, who are decked out in butch sailor drag.

Today I Celebrate Your Life.
Today I Celebrate Our Love.

Happy 50th Birthday!
Alan Gellman

July 13th, 1951 - January 27th, 2001

Death Ends Life…
But Not Relationships.
From the moment I met you, I loved you.
I loved you then, I love you now,
I love you…forever.
You are my best friend.
You are my lover.
You are my partner.
You are my teacher.
You are my mentor.
You are my hero.
You are my star.
You are my everything.
You are still the best part of me.
You made life so incredibly beautiful in a million tiny little phenomenal ways that return to me with every breath I take.
Without You I Am Naked In This Cold World.
Without Death There Can Be No Life.
Your Life Touched Mine So Magically,
So Deeply, So Intensely, So Completely.
How Can Your Death Do Anything Less?
If There Is A Heaven, I Know You Are There.
If There Are Angels, I Know You Are One.
If There Is Love, I Know You Are.

I Love You Then, Now and Always,
