thrilled by her session with the psychic and is now convinced he's the best there is, saying, "I believe in him 100 percent."

The first time Rosie O'Donnell met Boy George, she didn't know it was him.

The retired chat show host will produce George's Taboo musical on Broadway next year after persuading the former Culture Club frontman to give her the rights for the show. But she didn't recognize him when she first met him last year, O'Donnell now admits.

She recalls, "I was in London to see my friend Madonna's show, and while I was there I went to see George's play. I thought, 'This would be great on Broadway.'

"I got chatting to the barman after the show and he said, 'Do you want to meet him? Oi, George.'

"He was actually in the play and I didn't even know it was him. He doesn't play himself in the play, he plays someone else.

"He stepped forward and said, 'Hi, I'm George O'Dowd.' I was amazed."

Legendary country star and gay icon Dolly Parton loves the work she is doing now — even if it isn't as successful as her earlier music.

The busty "I Will Always Love You" singer is conscious her records have stopped selling well, but believes that the longevity of her career has been a blessing.

She says, "I've been doing it for 40 years and for 25 of them I was always in the Top 20. That was a good career. I don't begrudge the young people the chance to make their mark either.

"It makes you conscious of your age, but I know I can't change that. I only want to be the best at whatever age I am — the best 50 year old, the best 60 year old.

"I love the music I do now. It's from my childhood and it's deep in my heart. But I'd feel isolated and lacking accomplishment if I just did this acoustic music for the rest of my life."

Legendary thespian Sir Alec Guinness enjoyed an "intimate friendship" with playwright Alan Bennett and a "sexual passion" for another actor, John Garley, according to a new biography of the star.

The book, written by Gary O'Connor, claims late Star Wars actor Guinness, whose bisexuality was revealed after his death in 2000, started the friendship with Bennett after the pair worked together on a play in 1973.

"The meeting and partnership began an intimate friendship which was to last until Alec's death," claims O'Connor.

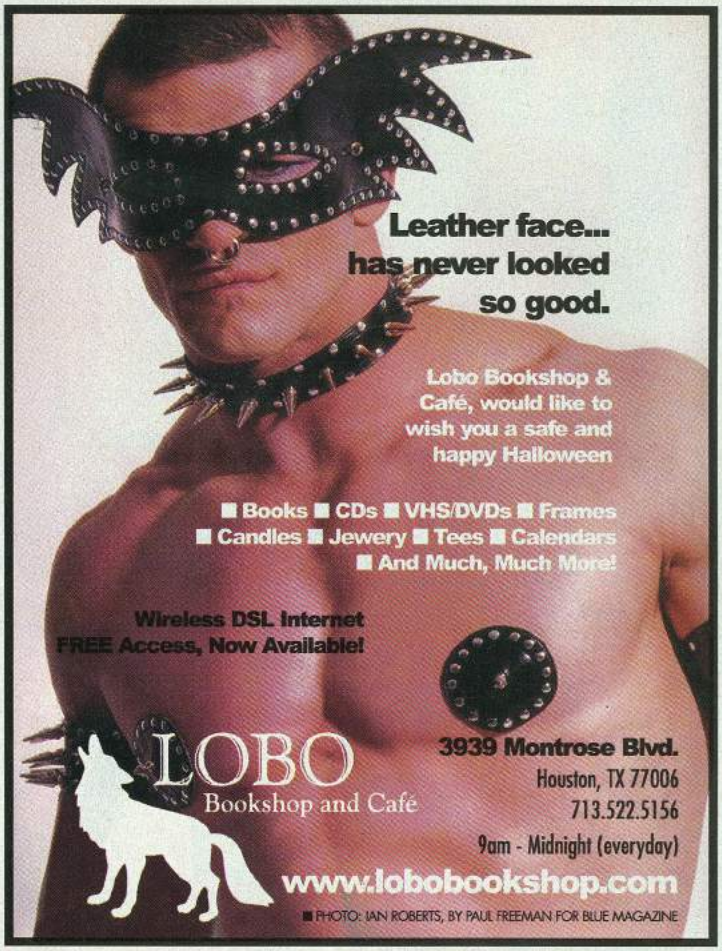

But answering the question of whether the relationship went any further than friendship, the biographer quotes a close colleague of Sir Alec's telling him, "There is a lover of Sir Alec's who is still alive but I don't want to say who. Alan Bennett would know."

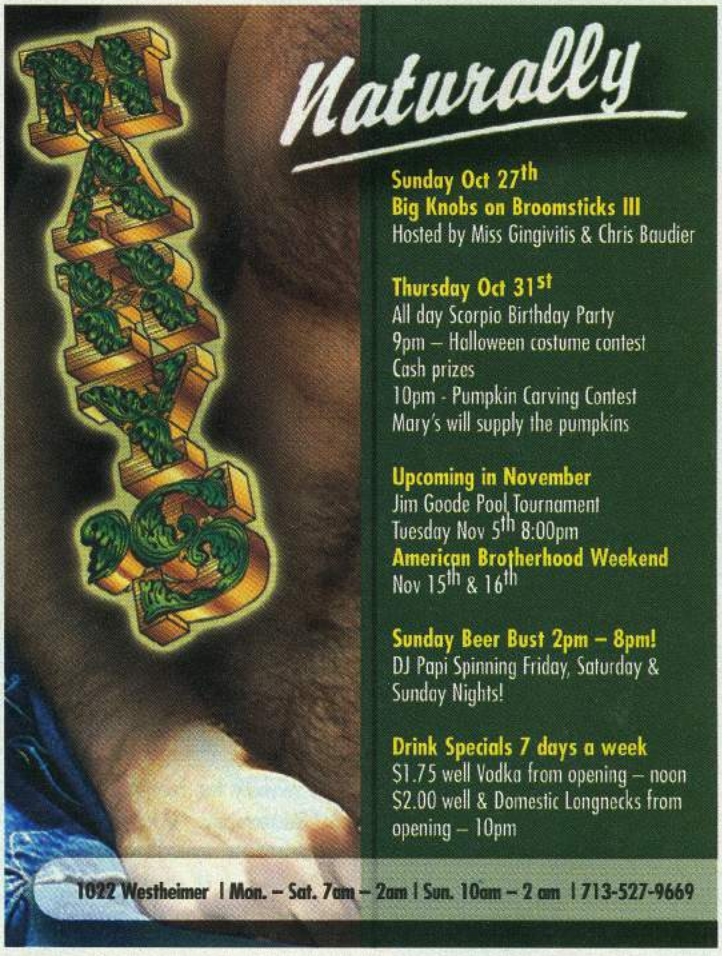

The details regarding Garley, the husband of British soap actress June Brown, are more explicit — O'Connor says Guinness was in "hot sexual pursuit" of Garley and was once seen "chasing him [Garley] down the corridor in his pajamas."

Garley later attempted to commit suicide by gassing himself, but his wife found him still alive and he died in the hospital four days later.

Quick Bits — Cher will say a fond farewell to her fans with her first TV special in three years. The pop superstar, currently winding up what she says is her last-ever world tour, is to tape a two-hour concert special for NBC-TV at Miami's American Airlines Arena next month. Cher last appeared in a concert special on American cable channel HBO's Cher — Live In Concert in 1999.

Julie Andrews is set to return to playing a movie nanny almost 40 years after she thrilled cinema audiences as Mary Poppins. The Oscar-winning actress will star as the nanny in TV movies Eloise at the Plaza and Eloise at Christmastime based on the hit children's books. Both films will be shot next year and aired over the holiday season in 2003.

A shining example

Star Search winner Marty Thomas was an original American idol

by scott huffman

Long before American Idol ignited television airwaves, there was Star Search. In fact, several of today's biggest celebrities — including Rosie O'Donnell, Drew Carey and Christina Aguilera — made "before-they-were-stars" appearances on the series. But only Marty Thomas can lay claim to snatching the 1992 Junior Vocalist Champion title from a then relatively unknown Britney Spears.

Thomas, now 23, never stopped performing. His experience ranges from parts in small, community theatre to roles under the bright lights of Broadway. Currently focusing on recording, Thomas signed a deal with New York City's West End Records, where he now lives.

Scott Huffman: When did you first begin singing publicly?

Marty Thomas: I grew up on a small farm in northern Missouri. I didn't have a lot of opportunity to sing publicly, but I did have family support and incredible drive at a really young age. When I was around five years old, I saw a poster promoting a talent show at the county fair, and I entered the contest. I sang an a cappella song that I had learned in Sunday school, and I won. My parents were a little shocked and amazed.

SH: How did you progress from singing in local talent shows to getting a role in Broadway's The Secret Garden?

MT: One thing just led to another. I had been auditioning for community and regional theatre, and I was getting larger and larger roles. During a Kansas City production, I became good friends with Danielle Findley who had played Annie on Broadway. Danielle passed my name to her New York agent who later contacted my parents about a part in The Secret Garden, a role that one of her clients had outgrown. When that opportunity came up, my parents mortgaged the farm and took the family on its first vacation to New York so that I could audition. I got the part, and a week and a half later, mom and I moved here.

SH: Describe the experience of performing on Broadway at such a young age.

MT: It's funny that you say that, because the experience is really all that I remember. I was 11 or 12 at the time, and it was such a whirlwind that the details aren't clear. I was going to public school while performing eight shows a week, so the schedule was a little maddening. But I cannot say that I regret a minute of it. I worked with some amazing people like John Cameron Mitchell, Alison Fraser, Rebecca Luker, Howard McGillin and Mandy Patinkin. The education I got just by watching them was invaluable.

SH: Has it been difficult to overcome the Star Search association with Britney Spears?

MT: When I think of all the things I've done in my life — all the hard work I've put into my career — the one thing that people go nuts over is something I did when I was 12 years old. It's funny, and it's fun to talk about it. But I'm older now. And I don't want to be known for a novelty item that I did as a child.

SH: With a background in acting, singing and dance, you are obviously a multi-talented performer. In which area would you now like to focus your energy?

MT: That was a difficult question for me. When I moved back to New York after college, I found myself attempting to excel in many areas. But I just wasn't getting ahead in any particular one. I would have mild success in theater and I would abandon it to record. Then I would have mild success in recording and I would abandon it to dance. So I decided to narrow my focus to one or two areas. For me, though, there is no feeling like getting on stage and singing. It is just a high above all others. So I would really like to break out as a recording artist.

SH: You recently released a new single called "Thank You (Power of Love)." Tell me a little about that project.

MT: Yeah, my new single just came out this month. Warren Rigg wrote and produced it; Blaze remixed it. The song is an amazing track, and it's getting great reviews. It's also the lead single from an amazing album called Dance For Life: West End Records Celebrates LIFEbeat's 10th Anniversary. The album is a compilation CD that benefits LIFEbeat, an HIV/AIDS outreach organization. It features remixes from several legendary DJs like Junior Vasquez and Danny Tenaglia. In fact, next week I will be involved in a show that VH1 is taping about Dance For Life.

SH: Dance music seems always to have been dominated by divas. Do you think it is more difficult for a guy to break into the scene?

MT: I've had some difficulties fitting into the genre. Dance music is predominantly released to the gay clubs, which is great. Unfortunately, gay clubs usually prefer to book performances with divas like Pepper MaShay and Deborah Cooper. It has been difficult for me to get bookings and to get respect. But male artists are slowly changing the rules and beginning to break the barriers. I love dance music. But at the same time, I in no way intend to limit myself to being labeled a dance artist. I feel that my music crosses over into a larger genre.

SH: Do you have plans to release an album soon?

MT: For the moment we are simply releasing my music one single at a time. I'm trying to build some recognition in the industry, and I am trying to get the singles played. But I am also beginning to shop an album deal with larger labels. If no one picks it up, then we plan to release an album on the West End label.

SH: How did you connect with DJ Reed McGowan for your first single "Resurrect Me (Lift Me Up)?"

MT: At that time, I was performing at open mic nights and talent contests at various clubs in New York ... anyplace that had a band or would let me bring a CD. Reed was the DJ at a gay club called Blue where I entered a Gong Show-type contest hosted by a drag queen named Hedda Lettuce. After hearing me sing, Reed asked if I would demo his song "Resurrect Me." He originally had written it with a diva in mind. But once I recorded it, I was not prepared to let anyone else have it. I made the song my own.

SH: When you debuted "Resurrect Me" at the 2001 Winter Music Conference, you performed wearing a Boy Scout shirt. Was that a political statement?

MT: You know, Boy George thought it was a big political statement at the conference. Actually, though, the airline lost my luggage. I was stuck with just my carry-on bag that contained two pairs of pants, swim trunks and a T-shirt. I went to a thrift store before my performance in search of something that would look good with leather pants. The Boy Scout shirt just barely fit me, and I thought it would be a fun thing to wear. At the time I didn't even know about the drama connected with the Boy Scouts. I'm just not very political.

SH: Over the summer, you opened a concert in Central Park for the often-outrageous Grace Jones. Describe that experience.

MT: She is one crazy chick. She scared me! But I didn't get to talk to Grace too much. I was there to perform "Let's Go Dancing," a cover of the classic number that Sparque did for West End. The party in Central Park was massive. It was amazing to open for Grace Jones and to see her work — but she scared me stupid.

SH: Did you catch American Idol over the summer?

MT: Yeah, I watched some of the episodes. I think it was really cool. I have to admit, though, that I never called in to vote. I loved Kelly, but I was rooting for RJ.

The Coming Out Party

Houston's gay play on My Fair Lady

stage

by todd epperson

Todd Epperson is the assistant editor of Qtexas. He can be reached at qtexwriter@aol.com.

Long-term partners Cal and Sid were getting a little bored with their lives. Same friends, same dinner parties, same tired conversations. As Cal says in the opening chapter of The Coming Out Party: "Sick of supper and Streisand, The Meatrack and Minnelli, the bronzer and the bromide. It's all tired...I'm bored with them all because they're so bored."

So what are the Hollywood couple to do? Why pick up an overweight,near-sighted blond UCLA student, make him buff, teach him about the finer things in life and give him a debut at the Debutantes for Human Rights Halloween Ball. Of course!

Such is a basic plot line of the novel, which was turned into a play in 1995. After successful runs in New York and Los Angeles, Houston's Theatre New West opened. its 2002-2003 season with the Southwest premier of the comedy, The Coming Out Party, by John Michael Caffey. Adapted from Mr. Caffey's PEN award-winning novel for Outstanding Fiction, the play has also been described as a gay Pygmalion, set in West Hollywood, circa 1977.

Theatre New West Artistic Director Joe Watts said he is very excited about this production and the opportunity to present it to Houston audiences. He also has high praise for author Caffey.

"He's just been wonderful to work with on this project," Watts said. "I haven't met a sweeter man."

Now living in Venice, Calif., Caffey said that he had submitted his play to 24 regional theatres and Houston was the first to jump on board.

"I'm very happy that it will be staged in Houston because I think the city has a real cross-culture of people," he said.

The road to Houston began in 1982 in West Hollywood. Caffey attributes his colorful downstairs neighbors as inspiration for the novel.

"There was this annual ball called the Gay Girls Riding Club where all the money went to charity," he recalls. "Frida, this ancient drag queen, insisted that I go.

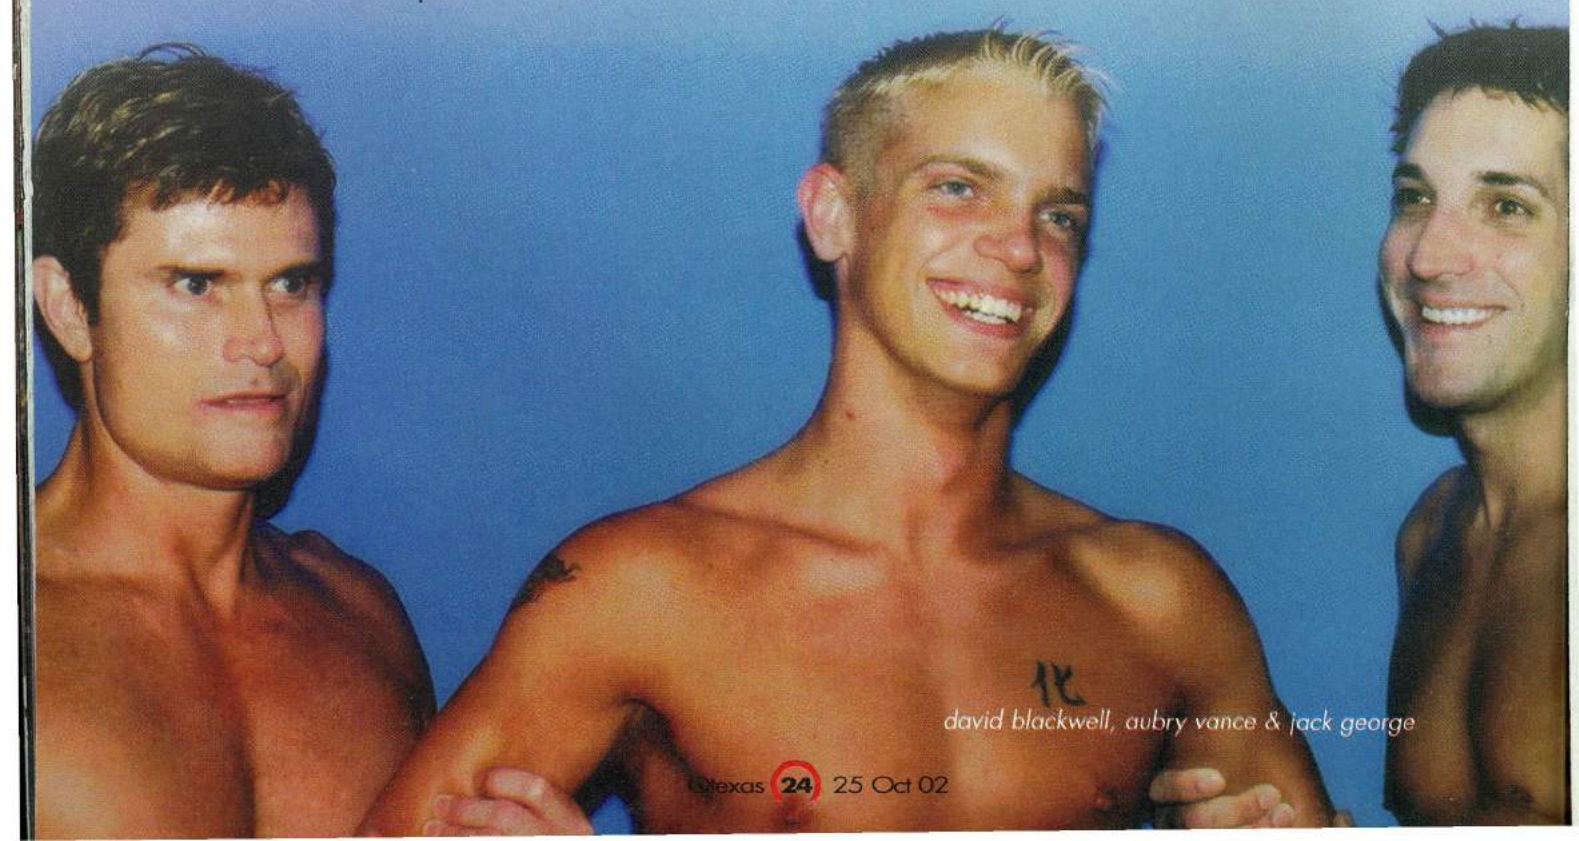

"It had a Las Vegas theme that year and I was dressed all in silver. It was sort of my coming out."

Later, as a graduate writing student at the University of Southern California, Caffey had to come up with a writing project and the idea of The Coming Out Party was born. Its publication was a fluke — one of his professors turned him on to a friend in the industry and all of the sudden he was a published author.

"I then took a page from the Jacqueline Susanne school of marketing and set up book signings wherever I could," Caffey said. " I remember at the first book signing, I signed one copy, 'Best Wishes, Joan Crawford'"!

be married off to a character named Bernardo, a chi-chi interior designer — who happens to be based upon a real person. After all this work, the proud parents certainly don't want their pride and joy to end up hustling on Hollywood Boulevard!

But first there's extensive workouts, etiquette lessons, Gay Sex 101 and fashion advice. Hal even keeps a diary...

Cal and Sid say that I should write in here every day and say that I should put down my impressions of my Growth as a Homosexual. Today I jogged with a nice guy named Griff who looks like the coach at the high school back home.

Actually, a lot of guys that come to Cal and Sid's look like coaches back home, except they cut hair not coach.

Such dry, spot-on gay humor is what makes the novel and the play so likeable.

Caffey said he thinks the play portrays gay men in a very realistic, honest light and teaches people to accept others the way they are.

"You know somewhere, sometime, last call is eventually called," he said. "I think we learn there's something more."
