LOWDOWN ON WHAT'S WHAT BEHIND THE HEADLINES

THE TONY THAT UPSET JANET LEIGH

You'd think a girl who'd made a baseball picture would know the pitch on curves. Maybe Janet did. But she also learned there are curves and curves. As you will on p. 8.

SIR KNIGHT AND HIS KNIGHTMARE

Ye knights of old proved very bold jousting for a damsel in distress. But the damsel 'Sir' Doug'll always remember is the maid who didn't wilt in the tilt told on p. 10.

WHY WAS THIS GIRL SILENCED?

It may seem unbelievable that in the heart of the Land of Free Speech anyone can be silenced. Yes the girl, left, was. The reason? Leaf to page 23, and get a civic shock!

WHY THEY CALL GIL ROLAND AMIGO

His pals call him Amigo, Spanish for friend. Not all the pals were males, either as you'll learn in the inside story on p. 39 that no one has ever told until now about Ronald.

HOW TO TURN WINE INTO A BEDLAM

Wherever she goes, news seems to happen. And tho our story on p. 44 is all about El Morocco — Denise Darcel is in there, too, having champagne when... oh, turn to 44.

JOHN WAYNE AND A GAL NAMED GAIL

Just when it seemed John Wayne's woes were buried someone said, "Russell's back." Gail Russell, that is. But not to enter our John's other life. Read facts on p. 13.

By DEXTER BEGLEY

WHEN a young girl committed suicide in the Reformatory for Women at Framingham, Mass., a few years ago, an investigation pointed to the cause of her self-destruction as unrequited love for another female inmate. To the few people who know anything about women's prisons, unnatural love is an open secret, but to most people the extent of it may come as a shock.

Recently, the movie "Caged" portrayed a bastille for babes, based on facts brought out by a gal reporter, Virginia Kellogg, who arranged to get herself locked up. It was a pretty grim story, but the Johnston office being what it is, the movie didn't dare show the real uncensored facts.

out men, their sex problems get worst. "Strong sexual drives in some of these prisoners," says an authority, "is what landed them there in the first place." Chief among these offenses are:

- 1—Adultery.
- 2—Prostitution.
- 3—Unlawful cohabitation.
- 4—Neglect of children
- 5—Communicating V.D.
- 6—Open lewdness.

Waiting for every newcomer are the "lady-lovers," an inside term for the large group of off-beat women found in every prison. Lady-lovers pair off, get into triangles and jealous brawls, using both seduction and force to corrupt other girls. Strange as it may seem, even rape may occur in women's prisons.

There is only one Federal moll pen and that is at Alderson, West Virginia, but there are many state prisons and reformatories for women. They all vary in the amount of control over prisoners, as well as in the type of wardens and matrons, ranging from good to bad to corrupt and vicious. Unlike men's pens, very few chicken coops use cells or the cell-block system. Most of the reformatories (for light sentences, first offenders, etc.) are built on the Open Plan. This is a group of cottages, often with individual bedrooms, around a central building; with no walls or fences and sometimes without even locks on the doors. A set-up like this can give the lady-lovers maximum freedom to practice their evil. State prisons (for serious offenses and incorrigibles) favor the dormitory system, with as many as eighteen girls to a dorm, or cell-bedrooms, with two to a cell. The opportunities for sex-starved prisoners are obvious.

The amount of love letters that get passed around an average prison would swamp a small post office and are known as "chick notes." Here's a typical one, intercepted by Dr. Joseph Wilson, psychiatrist at the State Reformatory for Women, Clifton, N.J.:

"Hi Pal Neta: I have had the urge to write before to ask you why Tiny don't write anymore. Neta, God knows I love (Continued on next page) her oh so dam much until it hurts. Anyone over here with an ounce of truth in their hearts can truthfully say that I have not cheated on her any time at all. Golly Neta there is plenty of girls that would like to be my friend. I mean a chick . . . Jackie."

There are other "chick notes" that surely cannot be repeated or printed.

"Chick notes" are common in all moll pens and, even in the best of them, the authorities don't worry too much about them. But in the prisons that are run by corrupt matrons, "chick notes" lead to open love affairs and worse. Stabbings, narcotics, pornographic pictures, mixed outdoor picnics with local lads, seduction of the innocent and recruiting for prostitution after release are only a few of the inside scandals of the bad brig. In one of these a hardened lady-lover recently slashed her 18-year-old girl friend with a knife. It developed that the older woman was about to be released and had fixed the youngster's face so no one else would want her.

Narcotics in a Model Prison

An ex-inmate of an eastern penitentiary has told a shocking story about that so-called model institution. She told about the head matron, who had a young prisoner for a pet, but got other prisoners anything they could pay for—liquor, drugs or an evening with a guard or attendant of the nearby state prison farm for men.

In this prison the girls are issued two cotton dresses, a coat and a slip. No bra and no nightgown. The girls often beat each other to a pulp for possession of a brassiere sent by relatives or friends.

Teen-aged delinquents and wayward minors too often get mixed up with prostitution and shoplifting gangs, who openly recruit them on their arrival.

Most shocking indictment of conditions in womens' jails was 'test tube baby' conceived by inmate in Pa. prison.

Sadistic matrons, who have been attracted to their jobs because of their own twisted urges, also prey upon young first offenders.

Here's what another ex-inmate had to say about her first night in a prison dormitory where eighteen girls slept in cots only two feet apart:

"I could distinctly hear strange noises from three or four beds in the room. I thought at first someone might be sick. There came the sound of a key in the lock of the barred door at the end of the ward. Four scantily clad forms went scurrying back to their beds. After the matron had gone out again, I turned to the girl in the next cot. 'What are they running for?' A suggestive smile played around her lips. 'Stupid! They've been dating,' she said."

Official Had Private Harem

This convict in skirts, who had been sentenced for check forgery, spilled the beans about the warden, who, in this case, was a man. He had installed his willing favorites in luxurious private rooms in a special wing of the prison. Other prisoners referred to it as "The Harem" and many vied for the chance to get with it and enjoy the special favors of negligee, good food, pretty dresses, cosmetics, and parties with liquor.

In one of the prisons attended by Dr. Joseph Wilson, discipline and control was so effective that the girls were able to do little more than pass "chick notes." He reported on one girl (by law real names of prisoners may not be revealed), who swore to her fellow prisoners just before her parole, that she would return to the pen and pitch woo with a guy right on the premises. She made good her promise, too, until she was caught bringing her boy friend into one of the public buildings of the unfenced prison.

STRANGE FATE OF PROUD BEAUTY

A young man saw a young and beautiful woman run stark naked towards him pursued by two huge dogs and a hunter who cried out, "Keep away: She's got it coming." As he spoke the woman was brought to a stop.

The hunter then told an incredible tale of frustrated passion and punishment. The young man drew back, his hair on end, and became a spectator to one of the most sadistic scenes ever described. This amazing story (only one of a 100) is told in full detail in Boccaccio's Decameron. This 540 page illustrated and unexpurgated Decameron is the book of which the critic Hutton has said, "Its effect upon us is the effect of life which includes for its own good, things moral and immoral." UNTOLD STORY OF

Emilie, pathologists found, was not only epileptic, but suffered from a serious glandular disorder which caused all of the glands in her body to be three times their normal size. Such a condition, they said, would eventually have produced death even if epilepsy had not been a factor. Whether other members of the Quints may suffer similar glandular disturbances is strictly a matter for speculation.

None of the remaining four girls is believed to have epilepsy, Canadian doctors say, since Emilie apparently did not have a "twin" among the other four. Had one of them been Emilie's twin, she too would have been a victim of the disease from birth. None of the remaining four has suffered any serious ailment during the past five years save Marie, who suffers from anemia.

Following Emilie's death, the Quints elected to go their separate ways to a greater degree than ever before. Yvonne and Cecile became student nurses at a Montreal Hospital and Annette and Marie, following their 21st birthday and their $250,000 inheritance, rented a swank apartment in Montreal and announced that they intended to set up house-keeping "just like any other young girls."

Annette busied herself with studying piano, while Marie opened a florist's shop near the hospital where her sisters are in training.

Angered at the sudden show of independence on the part of his daughters, Dionne complained to the newspapers that "outside intruders" had influenced the girls to split with their family and to treat their brothers and sisters "almost with contempt."

This past Christmas, Dionne said, the girls refused to spend the holiday with the family and did not even bother to send a card or a present. Confronted with their father's charges, the Quints professed a desire to "live our own lives" and denied ignoring their family. Their presents arrived belatedly after Christmas.

Querried as to reports that Annette is "deeply in love" with a French Canadian university student, a spokesman for the Quints and their financial advisor since their 21st birthday, told newsmen:

"The girls are enjoying a normal social life with friends of both sexes. They like to dance, listen to music, go to shows, read books and cook their own meals.

Friends of the four, UNCENSORED learned, gain admittance to the apartment only if they know how many times to ring the bell—a complicated code revealed to only a few.

"The girls are sick and tired of being treated as side-show freaks," one of their new friends told us. "They have lived in a goldfish bowl all of their lives and they now want to come out from behind the glass and see how everyone else lives.

"All four are showing a healthy interest in boys, but it is unlikely that Yvonne and Cecile will become serious about anyone until they complete their training as nurses. Annette, from all indications, intends to be the first to marry. Marie is pretty involved in running her flower shop at the moment, but she has an admirer too.

"Matter of fact, he sent her flowers last week!" ●

LOVE IN WOMEN'S PRISONS

In all the talk about riots in men's prisons and the need for reform it is usually forgotten that there is a special problem about women's prisons. A top journal of penology has pointed out that 60% of cons in skirts are emotionally abnormal and this fact is due chiefly to homosexuality and nymphomania. This 60% tries to convert the rest of the girls. As Dr. Wilson said, women cannot bear separation from families, as well as men, and are more likely to develop emotional storms that are easily exploited by hardened perverts.

In short, initiation into the sororities of Jailtown College is too often a sordid mess that is ignored or hushed up. The public is demanding more prison reforms today and our lawmakers are slowly getting under way. It's a long-overdue job and, as a reminder, it might be said, "Don't forget the girls." ●
