As we step into October—a month that celebrates both National LGBTQ+

History Month and National Coming Out Day—OutSmart is proud to present this print issue brimming with stories of resilience, achievement, and community leadership.

This month's issue begins with news of the LGBTQ+ Victory Fund's unusually early endorsement of Harris County's "Fab Five" judges—a move that speaks to the reputation that these LGBTQ judges have for consistent excellence on the bench. They remind us of the importance of authenticity and impartiality, and that LGBTQ representation in the judiciary strengthens our democracy.

The theme of visibility continues in Lourdes Zavaleta's profile of Alejandra Salinas, who is running for Houston City Council At-Large Position 4. With experience in grassroots activism and national political work, Salinas is a strong voice for accountability in infrastructure spending, reminding us that local politics is at its best when every impacted community has a seat at the table.

October also brings an event especially close to our hearts: the University of Houston

LGBTQ+ Alumni Network's Coming Out Day fundraiser. Emceed by Gianna Christina Ramirez, the evening illuminates our collective history through storytelling. It's a testament to the power of sharing our journeys openly—and to the chosen families that sustain us.

Of course, October is also the month of our annual Gayest & Greatest Awards. This year, more than 100,000 votes poured in for over 2,500 nominees, highlighting the depth and breadth of Houston's LGBTQ community. Inside, you'll find the full slate of winners, along with feature stories on 13 honorees whose work reflects joy, innovation, and impact. From Delulu, our Best New Drag Queen whose playful artistry is matched only by her determination, to community leaders like Kelly Nichols at the Montrose Center and photographer Nora Dayton, these stories remind us why Houston remains a beacon for queer life in the South.

Elsewhere in this issue, we highlight advocates like Brian Klosterboer of the ACLU of Texas, who continues to defend LGBTQ rights in the courts; Gianna Christina Ramirez, honored with a Gayest & Greatest award for her decades of community work; and Eric Kirkpatrick, whose legal practice centers empathy and the lived experiences of his clients. Arts and culture awards went to innovators like The Happening at the Orange Show, while dining and nightlife winners include ambitious newcomers like the City Cellars HTX restaurant along the bayou in Houston's East End.

Together, these stories form a rich mosaic of LGBTQ Houston's ambitions and accomplishments. They remind us that our community thrives because of those who dare to serve, to create, and to dream boldly.

Finally, we invite you to join us in person for the Gayest & Greatest 2025 Celebration at South Beach on October 23. It will be a night of joy, connection, and well-earned recognition for our winners and finalists who make Houston such a vibrant place to live.

RSVP today at givebutter.com/OSGG2025.

Coming Out and Taking the Stage

UH LGBTQ+ Alumni Network fundraiser spotlights unique coming-out stories.

by BRANDON WOLF

The University of Houston LGBTQ+ Alumni Network is hosting a fundraiser on October 11 at Los Robles Bar & Grill to support their scholarship grant program. The event takes place on National Coming Out Day, a day to raise awareness, foster acceptance, and celebrate LGBTQ visibility. Its roots trace back to the 1987 National March on Washington for Lesbian and Gay Rights.

This year's alumni event will feature Coming Out Monologues and Stories, a special program in which actors present monologues based on diary-like submissions from members of Houston's LGBTQ community. Trans activist Gianna Christina Ramirez will emcee the evening.

The event's fundraising chair is Frank de Oro, a 39-year-old gay male who also serves as the show's director and editor. He suggested the concept to the board, remembering the emotional impact that similar programs had on him during his years in the Rio Grande area a decade ago.

The program will begin with a diverse set of monologues, followed by a 30-minute open-mic session for anyone wishing to share their own coming-out story. "These stories open up something very vulnerable," de Oro says, emphasizing the importance of sharing and embracing each other's experiences during challenging times. The monologues reveal how people have come out across different generations, highlighting the value of Pride to people of all ages and backgrounds.

De Oro describes the event as a safe space for all, especially for younger generations seeking guidance from their LGBTQ community. He says the alumni network hopes to make this program an annual event on National Coming Out Day, telling more and more stories from Houston's LGBTQ community.

WHAT: Coming Out Monologues and Stories

WHEN: Doors open at 5:30 p.m.; the event concludes at 8 p.m.

WHERE: Los Robles Bar & Grill, 10444 Hempstead Road

Speaking Truth, Finding Family

Jennifer Correa

36, she/her

Jennifer Correa, a straight ally, felt compelled to join the monologues presentation with a story about a lesbian woman who came out to her father. While reading the script, Correa was immediately captivated by the woman's humor and vibrancy, noting that she is "hilarious" and fortunate to have the support necessary to feel secure in her identity.

For Correa, these monologues are a testament to the wide range of experiences within the LGBTQ community, revealing the colorful individuality of each person's journey. She observes that our own fears often create greater barriers than actual circumstances, and that genuine support is often present around us, even if we do not always perceive it. Correa emphasizes the importance of chosen family, showing that meaningful support can come from surprising sources. She believes that coming out, while intimidating, may not be as overwhelming as it appears.

Correa regards National Coming Out Day as a tribute to courage and authenticity, celebrating those who bravely reveal their true selves despite the possibility of misunderstanding or rejection. She deeply respects individuals who choose honesty over comfort, and hopes that National Coming Out Day can provide meaningful opportunities to honor the strength and resilience required for self-acceptance and the pursuit of living openly. →

A Trans Voice Takes the Stage

Alejandro Alvarado

33, he/him

Alejandro Alvarado is a proud trans man who is preparing to take the stage and perform a monologue about the experiences of another trans man. He chose this role to challenge himself and step outside of his comfort zone. Recognizing that visibility for trans men can be limited, Alvarado was motivated to embrace this opportunity to share a story that resonates deeply with him—and potentially with others who may feel unseen. “I know there aren’t too many trans men who put themselves out there, so I said Why not?”

When Alvarado first read the monologue, he immediately felt a strong connection to the material. Many aspects of the story reflected his own experiences and emotions. “I felt like I could be the person in the story and put myself in his shoes,” he shared, highlighting the empathy and understanding that comes from lived experience. He believes that performances like these can foster greater awareness and acceptance.

Alvarado also sees National Coming Out Day as an important occasion for the LGBTQ community. He views it as a time to remind individuals that they are not alone. By participating in this monologue, Alvarado hopes to inspire others, promote visibility, and help people realize the value of sharing their stories.

Exploring Emotional Attraction

Holly Harris

30, she/her

After an eight-year break from performing in community-theater productions, Holly Harris, a resolute straight ally, is making her stage comeback. Harris was inspired to return with the encouragement of her friend Frank de Oro, who presented her with a monologue that deeply resonated with her.

In this performance, Harris takes on the role of a demisexual character, someone whose experience of sexual attraction is rooted in forming a profound emotional connection rather than being sparked by physical appearance or instant chemistry. Demisexual individuals often don’t feel sexual attraction until a strong bond and deep trust have developed with another person.

Although Harris herself does not identify as demisexual, she finds aspects of the character relatable. “I know what it feels like to not have that immediate physical attraction to someone. And sometimes, even in a long-term relationship, someone’s touch can unexpectedly feel unfamiliar, like the touch of a stranger,” she says. Harris believes these moments of emotional distance echo the demisexual perspective, and she appreciates the opportunity to convey such feelings onstage.

For Harris, participating in this production on National Coming Out Day holds special significance. She views the occasion as a valuable opportunity for people to come together and celebrate life authentically.

Searching for Identity and Belonging

Christopher Krause

35, it/its

Christopher Krause, a nonbinary queer polycule, will deliver two distinct monologues during the show: one reflecting on a personal story, and another focusing on someone else’s experience.

Krause’s own piece explores the journey of a gay man coming out, followed by the realization that traditional gender labels don’t fit. Describing it as “a wild ride,” Krause shares, “I was very young, my first relationship was chaotic, and it all led to my coming out.”

The second monologue centers on a gay male who is outed in dramatic teenage fashion. Krause hopes to emphasize that even after such an experience, it’s not the end of the world. “You always get to find your own community, your own tribe, and your own family in the end.”

Active in the local theater scene, Krause recently appeared in The Laramie Project and enjoys bringing authentic stories to life on stage. “I love telling stories that get the audience invested,” Krause says. “It’s important to portray real experiences honestly and let the audience join me in that journey.”

For Krause, National Coming Out Day is a celebration of the freedom that comes with honesty and stepping into the light.

Credit Card and Debit Card Safety

Protect yourself from identity theft.

Fraudsters are getting smarter, but you can stay a step ahead. Criminals use sophisticated tools to steal credit and debit card information, leaving victims with the hassle of replacing cards, resetting automatic payments, and disputing fraudulent charges. Fortunately, you can take practical steps to reduce your risk and minimize inconvenience if fraud does occur.

Credit Card vs. Debit Card Quick Tip:

Use credit cards for purchases and keep your debit card primarily for ATM withdrawals. Credit cards generally offer stronger protection than debit cards:

- Legal Protections: Credit cardholders have liability capped at $50 under federal law — and many issuers offer zero-liability protection.
- Cash Flow Protection: Fraudulent charges don't directly drain your bank account, so you maintain access to your cash while disputes are resolved.
- Ease of Disputes: Disputing a charge is typically easier and faster, and your credit card account remains usable while you wait for a replacement card.

Preventing Old-Fashioned Theft

- RFID Protection: Carry contactless cards in an RFID-blocking wallet or sleeve to prevent wireless skimming.
- Inspect Card Readers: Look for loose or tampered card slots at gas pumps, ATMs, or checkout terminals.
- Keep Cards in Sight: Whenever possible, watch your card during transactions.
- Cover Your PIN: Shield the keypad from cameras and prying eyes when entering a PIN.

Digital Safeguards Quick Tip:

Turn on two-factor authentication and receive instant purchase alerts from your card issuer.

- Strong, Unique Passwords: Use a password manager to keep track of secure passwords.
- Two-Factor Authentication: Require a text, app code, or biometric confirmation before completing online purchases.
- Private Connections: Avoid entering payment information over public Wi-Fi networks.
- Virtual Card Numbers: Many issuers let you generate temporary card numbers for online purchases.

- Stay Alert for Phishing: Don't click on suspicious links or respond to requests for personal information via email or text.

Proactive Credit Monitoring & Freezing

- Credit Monitoring: Ask to receive security alerts when there are changes to your credit report, such as new account openings.
- Fraud Alerts: Tell lenders to verify your identity before approving new credit applications.
- Credit Freeze: Block all new credit inquiries until you lift the freeze. This is free and highly effective at preventing fraudulent account openings.

Insurance & Liability Protections

- Zero-Liability Policies: Visa, Mastercard, American Express, and Discover all offer strong protections, so check your cardholder agreement.
- Identity Theft Insurance: Covers certain costs related to restoring your identity, such as lost wages or legal fees.

- Homeowners/Renters Riders: Many policies offer inexpensive riders for identity theft coverage.
- Employer Benefits: Some workplaces offer group identity-protection plans, so review what's available to you.

Emerging Security Technologies

- Biometric Authentication: Some cards and apps use fingerprint or facial recognition for added security.
- Digital Wallets: Apple Pay, Google Wallet, and others use tokenization to protect your real card number.
- Real-Time Alerts: Get immediate notifications for every transaction.
- Geolocation Matching: Some issuers verify your card use based on your phone's location.

A Quick-Response Plan

If you suspect fraud:

- Report Immediately: Call the number on the back of your card.
- Request a Replacement: Ask for expedited shipping.
- Update Automatic Payments: Keep a secure list so you can quickly transfer recurring charges.
- Monitor Accounts: Review statements and credit reports for several months afterward.

Card fraud and identity theft are unlikely to go away, but you can make yourself a difficult target. By combining physical precautions, digital security habits, proactive monitoring, and insurance protection, you can reduce both your risk and the inconvenience if fraud does occur.

Judicial Excellence vs. Political Gamesmanship

Harris County voters face a choice as they consider re-electing five LGBTQ judges in 2026.

by DAVID CLARKE

When the LGBTQ+ Victory Fund announced that it was endorsing five Harris County judges for re-election in 2026, a full year ahead of the general election and months before the Texas secretary of state's December 8 candidate filing deadline, it sent a remarkably clear signal. This unusually early endorsement emphatically proclaimed that these incumbents, dubbed the "Fab Five," are simply too good to risk losing.

"It's rare that a group of LGBTQ+ elected officials have done as well in office as the 'Fab Five' in Harris County have done," says Evan Low, Victory Fund's president and CEO.

"When you have a good thing, we say keep it going."

What makes this endorsement so significant is not just the candidates' shared LGBTQ identities. Their collective record on the bench demonstrates consistent impartiality, innovation, and excellence in one of the most complex judicial landscapes in America. Harris County is home to nearly five million people, which is more than the entire state of Louisiana. With dockets spanning civil trials, mental health commitments, and criminal proceedings, the Fab Five's decisions affect residents across every demographic line.

And yet, their very identities mean they carry a burden that their cisgender, heterosexual peers often don't. For highly visible professionals from marginalized populations, there is nearly always the expectation that they must be flawless.

"All judges know they will make unpopular decisions. A ruling in court, by definition, creates winners and losers," notes Judge Beau Miller. "My goal is not to be the best LGBTQ judge there is. My goal is to be the best judge there is who happens to be LGBTQ and/or HIV positive."

That distinction underscores the harsh truth that queer judges don't get to simply be "good enough." They are expected to outperform just to maintain legitimacy in the eyes of voters and colleagues.

Judge Beau Miller

SETTING THE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE JUDGE BEAU MILLER

Judge Beau Miller, presiding over the 190th Civil District Court, has become a symbol of that higher bar. In April, he was named Trial Judge of the Year by the Texas Association of Civil Trial and Appellate Specialists, an elite statewide organization whose members must be board certified in both civil trial and appellate law. It is one of the most prestigious honors in the Texas legal community.

“Presenting myself as a knowledgeable, experienced candidate who has done well on the bench, who’s been recognized for judicial excellence—no matter what the letters after my name are—that’s the goal,” Miller explains.

A former high-school band director and educator, Miller brings both empathy and rigor to the bench. His lived experience with HIV has also shaped his understanding of how health challenges can affect litigants. “When you walk into the 190th, you’re respected no matter who you are, where you come from, and what your background is,” he says. “If you can’t get a timely hearing or walk in with respect from the judge, then that is unjust.”

Respect, he emphasizes, must extend beyond the courtroom. “We have to go out in the community and get to know people who are not like you, respect them, and visit with them. You have those exchanges, and you learn.”

Miller’s recognition, coupled with his visibility as an openly gay and HIV-positive judge, exemplifies how the Fab Five are redefining what excellence looks like under scrutiny.

LEADING WITH INTEGRITY AND STRENGTH JUDGE SHANNON BALDWIN

If Miller demonstrates how excellence earns recognition, Judge Shannon Baldwin shows how representation coupled with leadership can transform institutions. As presiding judge of Harris County Criminal Court at Law No. 4, she made history as the first African American woman to hold that seat. But as she emphasizes, her legacy is broader than any “firsts.”

With more than 22 years of legal experience, including running her own firm, Baldwin has handled cases from traffic violations to capital murder. She has presided over specialty courts like SOBER Court and Veterans Court, providing vital support to people overcoming addiction and to veterans rebuilding their lives.

Her leadership extends county-wide. Baldwin has served as a local administrative judge for Harris County’s civil and criminal courts, overseeing all 16 criminal courts. A veteran of the U.S. Army Reserves, she is also an adjunct professor at Thurgood Marshall School of Law and an active member of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc.

Judge Shannon Baldwin

Representation matters, Baldwin notes, but it is her record that earns trust. “Whoever is on the other side of that bench, they need to see themselves,” she says. “Being a woman, being African-American, being a lesbian—all of those things collectively give me insight. It’s not a crystal ball, but it is intuition.”

Baldwin is also a single mother, and her motivation lies in that part of her identity. “I’d tackle every challenge of this job as long as I can hold my head up and make my daughter proud.”

Her story embodies resilience, but also leadership rooted in service. In an era when representation is still a rarity, Baldwin insists that her presence will one day be commonplace. Until then, she wears the mantle with pride, determination, and the quiet insistence that integrity matters most.

BUILDING NATIONAL MODELS JUDGE JASON COX

Judge Jason Cox, presiding over Harris County Probate Court No. 3, oversees both probate and all civil mental-health commitments in the county. His dual docket allows him to see, as he says, “every possible walk of life.”

Cox is particularly proud of creating an outpatient treatment program for mental-health patients, a model so effective it has gained national recognition. “The judge that preceded him tried to do that for 19 years,” Judge Jerry Simoneaux points out. “Judge Cox got it done in two.”

Cox is equally candid about the role identity plays in shaping fairness. “Judges have implicit biases. You have to work to set those aside before you go out there,” he explains. “Going through that exercise allows you to really hear these cases, and come up with a ruling that delivers justice with fairness.”

His commitment to normalizing equality is also personal. In his first year on the bench, Cox married his husband in his courtroom with his staff as witnesses. “I did that not just because I love my husband,” Cox shares, “but also to normalize it for all of them. To show them that a same-sex marriage is just like a regular marriage.”

Cox’s approach illustrates how fairness is not only a principle of the law but also a lived practice, demonstrated daily through both rulings and personal example.

HOLDING TO FAIRNESS JUDGE JIM KOVACH

Judge Jim Kovach of Harris County Civil Court at Law No. 2 stresses that impartiality requires constant self-awareness. “I do have lawyers who take very anti-LGBTQ+ positions, but they’re always respectful in court,” he says. “It takes a little bit of soul searching to make sure that I’m truthful with myself, and that I’m not going to be biased against them in the case. That would be unfair to their client, and it’s not good for justice.”

Kovach recalls advice from his conservative mother when he was first elected: “Remember, you’re a judge for everybody, → not just people on your side of the aisle. You're also our judge." Those words became a guiding principle, reminding him that the judiciary cannot afford to appear partisan or exclusionary.

Judge Jim Kovach

That perspective informs his sense of legacy. "If I can leave the judiciary knowing people trusted me to be fair, then that's the most important thing I could accomplish," he reflects. "I think about what legacy I'm leaving, and I want people to say that I was fair and impartial, that I treated everyone with respect, and that I upheld the integrity of the judiciary."

For Kovach, fairness is not simply about the outcome of a ruling. It is about maintaining the public's confidence in the system itself. "Part of the job is making sure people trust the system, because if they don't trust the judiciary, then they don't trust democracy itself."

That responsibility can weigh heavily, but he views it as central to his work. "We're entrusted with people's lives and livelihoods when they come before us," he says. "You can't take that lightly. You have to approach it every day with humility, respect, and the understanding that people need to walk away believing they got a fair hearing."

Kovach's focus on fairness, respect, and institutional trust places him firmly alongside his Fab Five colleagues, each of whom demonstrates in their own way that impartial justice and lived authenticity are not at odds. They strengthen one another.

REDEFINING DIGNITY IN THE COURTS JUDGE JERRY SIMONEAUX

If Miller is about recognition and Baldwin is about leadership, Judge Jerry Simoneaux is about reform. For Simoneaux, who presides over Harris County Probate Court No. 1, innovation and dignity have been the hallmarks of his service. Long before he wore judicial robes, he was in courtrooms fighting simply for transgender clients to have their names and pronouns respected.

"When I was an attorney representing transgender people in courts, getting judges to acknowledge but enforce the correct pronoun and the correct name for the person that I was representing, just to show basic decency and humanity, was a bit of a struggle," Simoneaux recalls.

That struggle inspired sweeping reforms. He established a gender-neutral dress code, removed archaic sexist terms—like administratrix—from court filings, and even drafted a congressional resolution urging lawmakers to adopt non-gendered titles. "Female identifying attorneys were saying, 'Thank you for this. Why are we setting ourselves apart?'" Simoneaux says.

Judge Jerry Simoneaux

His leadership extends beyond language. Simoneaux created the Texas Probate Law American Inn of Court, a bench-bar association that mentors young attorneys and promotes professionalism. Attendance, he says, "has been higher than anybody has ever seen." He also spearheaded a new board certification in probate trial law, currently pending before the Texas Supreme Court.

The results are measurable. In Houston Bar Association polls, Simoneaux and Cox consistently rank at the very top among all judges in Harris County. "I was the first LGBTQ person to be appointed in a statewide judicial position," Simoneaux notes. "It was not because I'm LGBTQ. It was because I'm really damn good at what I do."

Still, he acknowledges the pressure of visibility. "I know that the minute I mess up, the first thing they're going to say is, 'Openly gay judge Jerry Simoneaux did this.' That's my fear. So we are very, very careful about how we conduct ourselves because we know something bad can reflect on our community, even if it's not connected."

The Fab Five as a Case Study

One of the most compelling parts of the Fab Five's story is how different their backgrounds are, and how those intersections inform their work. A U.S. Army veteran. A high school band director. A longtime probate attorney who once defended queer families in the days before marriage equality. A judge who oversaw Houston's largest HIV/AIDS health provider. Together, these wide-ranging experiences illustrate how diversity on the bench strengthens justice for everyone.

And these judges' consistent recognition bears that out. Whether in statewide honors like Miller's Trial Judge of the Year award or his top rankings in Houston Bar Association polls, the Fab Five aren't simply adequate. They're among the very best judges nationally.

"Judges who cannot be fair because of their own biases don't need to be judges, period," Judge Simoneaux emphasizes. That crystal-line clarity underscores why their work matters, not only in Houston but throughout the country.

More Than Representation

Representation is not tokenism, it's perspective. Judges who have lived through marginalization often bring a keener eye for fairness, precisely because they've navigated systems not built for them. And they also know the stakes are high.

"I know that the minute I mess up," Judge Simoneaux reflects, "the first thing they're going to say is, 'Openly gay judge Jerry Simoneaux did this.' That's my fear. So we are very, very careful about how we conduct ourselves because we know something bad can reflect on our community, even if it's not connected."

This pressure, however, has only sharpened their commitment. "When I'm myself, I'm just not going to miss," Baldwin says.

Why This Matters Now

The L.A. Times recently noted the historic rise of LGBTQ Americans running for office. In Texas, where politics remain extremely polarized, the Fab Five embody what it means to deliver excellence under scrutiny. They remind voters that identity does not disqualify one from public service. If anything, it enriches it.

Next year's elections will test whether Harris County voters value judicial excellence over political gamesmanship. But the Fab Five have already proven their case. They are not just LGBTQ judges. They are among the best judges Harris County, and America, have ever seen.

FIGHTING FOR A BRIGHTER FUTURE

City Council candidate Alejandra Salinas seeks to improve the lives of everyday Houstonians.

by LOURDES ZAVALETA

From breaking barriers in student politics to successfully working on a presidential campaign and now litigating high-stakes cases at a top national law firm, Alejandra Salinas is channeling her advocacy work toward Houston City Hall.

Salinas is one of 15 candidates running in the November 4 special election for City Council At-Large Position 4, a seat that became vacant in July after Leticia Plummer announced her run for Harris County judge. When asked why she believes she is the best fit for the position, Salinas points to her extensive background in politics and the law.

"I've spent the last 20 years of my life taking on big fights and getting things done—whether it was figuring out how to effectively organize young people around the country, taking on some of the world's biggest companies in court and winning, or working on pro-bono cases," Salinas says.

Endorsed by organizations such as the LGBTQ+ Victory Fund and Latino Texas PAC, Salinas' priorities include improving public safety, securing affordable and reliable city services, and strengthening the city's infrastructure. These issues are top concerns for Houston voters, Salinas says, noting that an important part of her campaign has been going out into the community and listening to the needs of those she interacts with.

"For too many Houstonians, the government isn't working as equitably and effectively as it should. I want to fight to change that, because if we can make our government work for all Houstonians—no matter who you are or what part of town you live in—we can start to do bigger things," she says. "But, we have to get the basics right. Filling a pothole is about so much more than just filling a pothole. It's about making sure that a family gets to work or school on time, or so they don't have to make a choice between fixing a tire and paying a medical bill or rent."

Rooted in her great-grandfather's story of immigrating from Mexico and building a life in Texas, Salinas' commitment to civic engagement began early. As a high school student in Laredo, she organized a walkout and secured a campus-wide forum for students to speak out against a federal immigration bill that would have harmed their community.

Her passion for uplifting marginalized communities continued as an undergraduate student at UT Austin. During her time there, she served as the first Hispanic president of the College Democrats of America and was a surrogate for President Obama's reelection campaign.

"I'VE SPENT THE LAST
20 YEARS OF MY LIFE
TAKING ON BIG FIGHTS AND GETTING THINGS DONE."

—Alejandra Salinas

In 2012, Salinas, who identifies as a lesbian, was a speaker at the Democratic National Convention and used that platform to come out in front of millions of viewers. "At the time, marriage equality was being debated and discussed in the country," she says. "I thought if I shared my story, it might be a little bit easier for someone else."

Inspired by her father's ability to advocate for others as a trial attorney, Salinas decided to attend law school and graduated cum laude at Boston College Law School. Now a partner at Susman Godfrey—a major Houston-based law firm that recently made headlines for successfully challenging President Trump's executive order against the firm—Salinas has helped win millions of dollars for her clients in court.

"One of my main cases right now involves suing artificial-intelligence companies for copyright infringement on behalf of authors whose works were stolen," she says. "While this recent litigation has been very meaningful, my pro bono work has also meant a lot to me." These pro bono cases include successfully defending Harris County Judge Lina Hidalgo and other County officials in election contests and working with the ACLU to secure a settlement with Magnolia ISD to eliminate a discriminatory hair policy.

Outside of working and campaigning, Salinas served on the board of the Greater Houston LGBTQ+ Chamber of Commerce, Second Mile Haiti, and C.60, a nonprofit dedicated to the restoration of LULAC's first clubhouse in Houston.

Salinas lives in Montrose with her wife and law-firm colleague, Elizabeth Hadaway. "I thank God every day that she is with me and by my side," Salinas says. "And also my dad and my sisters—I couldn't do this without them."

OutSmart readers who are interested in getting involved in Salinas' campaign can learn more about upcoming events on her website. "We're block-walking every Saturday and Sunday, so come join us for a two-hour shift," she says. "It's great block-walking weather, and we're having a lot of fun at the doors. Everyone is welcome."

Delulu

This Houston drag star
thrives on heart and hustle.

By OSM STAFF

BEST
QUEEN

In Houston's drag scene, a new star is shining brighter than ever: Delulu, winner of OutSmart magazine's Gayest & Greatest 2025 Best New Drag Queen. With pronouns shifting playfully between she/her/they in drag and they/him/she out of drag, Delulu embodies a fluidity and freedom that's at the heart of queer artistry. Born and raised in Southwest Houston before settling in Channelview, they've always been rooted in the city's vibrant culture—and now they're helping redefine it.

Delulu's story begins in the sixth grade, when a dance teacher introduced the class to Janet Jackson's Rhythm Nation. That performance unlocked something powerful. "It pushed me to perform," Delulu recalls. Around the same time, America's Next Top Model and Face Off sparked a love for makeup and femininity. But the true lightning strike came at 13, when RuPaul's Drag Race Season 6 aired. "It was my first time ever seeing drag. I immediately clung to all things queer."

As a teenager, Delulu boldly wore full faces of makeup to school—sometimes applying it on the bus and then wiping it off before going home. By 18, they were venturing into Montrose, sharpening their craft, and soaking in Houston's local drag energy.

But fear and self-doubt delayed their drag debut. "I kept putting it off, thinking I was running out of time," Delulu admits. The turning point came with a Lady Gaga-themed show, where audience votes secured Delulu's spot. Nerves aside, that first performance was unforgettable. "I basically did seven laps around the venue. By the end of the night, my ankles couldn't hold me up. It was the best fever dream ever."

OUTSMART GAYEST & GREATEST 2025 READERS' CHOICE AWARDS WINNERS & FINALISTS

The drag name itself comes from the word delusion—a cheeky reminder to create your own reality. “Do what you want. Be delusional. Have fun!”

And playfulness does indeed define Delulu's drag. Whether dancing, lip-syncing, or delivering comedic beats, her goal is connection. “When you come to a Delulu show, you're going to get a bit of comedy, a bit of dance, and a whole lot of fun and emotion.” The inspiration comes quickly; when an idea for a mix strikes, she makes it right away. “I always listen to a song and really try to feel the emotion, then connect that feeling to the crowd.”

Drag may be an art form of individuality, but Delulu emphasizes that her journey is a community effort. “It takes a village, and my village was there for me,” she says. Her debut night felt like a dream, not only because of the stage but also because of the overwhelming love from friends and chosen family. “I wouldn't be here if it weren't for them.”

Some performances stand out for their unexpected twists—like the time a revealing costume snagged on a lace bodysuit, leaving Delulu exposed in nude stretch fabric. “I truly felt naked,” she laughs. More importantly, she embraced growth through Persephone's Game of Drag Season 4. “I knew I wasn't going to win because I didn't know myself enough. But I wanted to make an impact, and I did.” That experience even gave her the confidence to host her own show.

Delulu's aspirations remain as bold as her performances. She hopes to sharpen her dance skills, expand her creative horizons, and continue hosting and performing across Houston. She dreams of projects that spotlight others, too. And if she could choose one legendary collaborator, it would be Joan Rivers. “I would have loved to hear everything she had to say about this lifetime.”

For now, winning Best New Drag Queen serves as a powerful affirmation. “For the first time, I feel like I'm where I'm supposed to be,” Delulu says. Her guiding mantra comes straight from her dream collaborator: “Life is tough, darling. Life is hard, so we'd better laugh at everything. Otherwise, we're going down the tube.”

With that spirit, Delulu isn't just living her drag dreams—she's making Houston laugh, dance, and believe in the beauty of a little delusion.

Brian Klosterboer

An ACLU attorney who fights for LGBTQ rights across Texas.

By BENJAMIN LEGER

Brian Klosterboer does his research. And not just the nuances of the law—he digs deep into Texas' LGBTQ history, learning about the trans rights activists and queer leaders who came before. Their stories put into perspective what his organization is trying to protect.

Before even mentioning his own work, Klosterboer will talk about the work of Phyllis Frye, the Texas judge who is the “grandmother” of the trans rights movement, or Anandrea Molina, who founded the Organización Latina Trans in Texas. And as senior staff attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union of Texas, what he does each day is incredibly important in defending the rights of LGBTQ Texans in the court system.

Klosterboer has served as lead counsel on a number of high-profile cases for the ACLU, such as fighting a state bill that aimed to ban drag performances or a school district that attempted to enforce a dress code policy based on gender stereotypes.

Klosterboer joined the ACLU in 2018, and says the threats to LGBTQ rights from state politicians have only increased.

“This is a particularly tough time,” he says, “but we need to learn from our LGBTQ+ elders and especially our trans elders who have persevered through difficult times before, recognizing that tough times are nothing new and we will remain resilient.”

That perseverance continues. In 2025, lawmakers in the Texas Legislature brought up more than 200 anti-LGBTQ bills, eight of which were successful. The ACLU sued to block key parts of Senate Bill 12, which

PROMINENT

went into effect this summer and bans school clubs like gay-straight alliances and discourages conversations about sexual orientation in the classroom, among other restrictions. Recently, Gov. Greg Abbott signed into law the state's public bathroom bill, aimed at trans and intersex people.

Klosterboer leans on his legal expertise not just in court, but also in sharing information with the public so they know their rights when it comes to new and discriminatory legislation. The bathroom bill, for instance, can penalize state and local government entities and buildings, but can't bring criminal penalties or fines on the individuals using such facilities, Klosterboer says.

While recent news reports indicate a troubling trend of politicians chipping away at LGBTQ rights, especially toward young people, Klosterboer aims to help the community share accurate information.

"We're kind of in a doom cycle," he says. "It's important to be careful that we aren't jumping to make things worse or spreading misinformation. It could get to a point where things get worse, but we're working to stop that and focus on building a better future."

Klosterboer wants the community to celebrate the rights we have. And to emphasize that point, he has his own celebration in store: an upcoming wedding with his partner. At the moment, he's seeking out queer-owned vendors and businesses for their big day.

Outside of the ACLU, Klosterboer teaches civil-rights litigation as an adjunct law professor at South Texas College of Law Houston. He also helped found the Houston chapter of the National Lawyers Guild of Houston, which is known for defending protesters and observing and documenting police action during protests.

The Round Rock native and Harvard Law graduate came to Houston around 2016 to work as a law clerk for former federal judge Vanessa D. Gilmore. During that time, his interest in local LGBTQ history grew. He met Houston's resident LGBTQ historian and radio host JD Doyle, as well as photojournalist and OutSmart photographer Dalton DeHart, who helped him uncover more about the rich history of Houston's queer community.

And today, that history provides context for the work Klosterboer does each day at the ACLU of Texas. "I'm incredibly honored and very grateful to receive these OutSmart awards," Klosterboer says. "I'm also very grateful to be in Houston. We have such a vibrant community here, and so many people who fight for human rights."

Gianna Christina Ramirez

Building community through trans visibility and hope.

By BRANDON WOLF

Gianna Christina Ramirez, 37, is a lifelong Cypress resident who proudly identifies as a pansexual trans woman. Her advocacy journey began early: at age 14, she came out as gay and founded her high school's first gay-straight alliance group. "I was a very loud teenager. You couldn't shut me up about the queer community," Ramirez recalls.

At the time, transgender representation was scarce and often negative in the media. "I came out as a feminine gay boy because I didn't know trans was an option," she explains, reflecting on a time when trans people were rarely portrayed as happy or well-adjusted.

Her understanding shifted at age 20, when she met Houston drag icon Lana Blake. "I said to her, 'How do you do that?' while I held onto her arm for dear life. I have been holding onto her for almost 17 years now."

After high school, Ramirez pursued non-profit work, starting as a development officer for an animal charity and later fundraising for various Houston-area nonprofits. "It's always been something that I am enthusiastic about."

But her path was not without its hardships. "In my youth, while surviving and trying to become a stable trans woman, I participated in sex work and was homeless at one point."

Outside of work, Ramirez has been deeply involved in the community, organizing drag shows and fundraising for nonprofits. She is now a member of the Diana Foundation, the nation's oldest continually active LGBTQ organization. She uses her skills to help with their fundraising efforts.

"If there is something I can be helpful with, I will sign up for it. I am all over the place. I am a people person," says Ramirez, who thrives on connecting people. "I like making everyone meet everyone."

MOST VALUABLE FEMALE VOLUNTEER

MOST VALUABLE FEMALE TRANS COMMUNITY VOLUNTEER

LEADING TRANS COMMUNITY FUNDRAISER

She will emcee a National Coming Out Day fundraiser this month, organized by the University of Houston LGBTQ+ Alumni Network, and she also worked with the Gay Softball World Series that was held in Houston last month.

Ramirez always enjoys panel discussions where she advocates for trans inclusivity. She was a participant in Pearl Bar's Transformation panel this past May, and helped with a pool party last month sponsored by FLUX Houston, an affinity group promoting HIV prevention among trans people.

Ramirez finds hope in the increasing visibility of thriving trans people. "I care about my trans peers. I have a special focus on those in marginalized communities. That's where a lot of my drive comes from—making sure that none of my sisters ever has to endure what I did."

The trans women that Ramirez has met in bars and on the streets—women who taught her about safety, survival, and sisterhood—have all shaped her sense of community.

Like so many others faced with today's hostile political climate, Ramirez struggles. "I can't even fathom the words to explain what it feels like to be trans in America right now," she says. "I've dealt with bullies my whole life. But this moment right now feels different. It's horrible."

After 20 years in the nonprofit sector, Ramirez feels burned out. She is now focused on reinventing herself as a full-time advocate and activist, working directly to build community.

A pivotal influence for Ramirez was Jose Esteban Muñoz's book Cruising Utopia: The Then and There of Queer Futurity. "The book is about queer futurism and moving on beyond queer pragmatism. He wants us to dream bigger," she explains.

"During these dark times, the most radical and transgressive thing we can do is have hope. Do not dream within the constraints of the current administration," she says. "I am an optimist. At my core, I believe there are more good people than bad."

As a youth, Ramirez never expected to reach age 40, but as that milestone approaches, she feels indestructible. After a lifetime of challenges, she is honored by her recognition in this year's Gayest & Greatest awards. "I'm just over the moon. This is a real glimmer of happiness during very dark times."

Kelly Nicholls

The chief development director for the Montrose Center is leading the nonprofit through uncertain times.

By LOURDES ZAVALETA

As LGBTQ nonprofits face the loss of government support, the work of community fundraisers like Kelly Nicholls (she/her) becomes even more significant.

Nicholls, winner of this year's Gayest & Greatest Leading Female Fundraiser, is the chief development director of the Montrose Center, a community center that provides an array of vital services to LGBTQ Houstonians.

"Our organization is about 60 percent federally- and state-funded through grants, so when we face political challenges like we're facing now, it gives us a level of uncertainty," Nicholls says. "This amplifies the need for us to go out, connect with donors, and find people who can help the Center by asking for their support."

Members of the LGBTQ community are rising to the challenge. "There's a lot to be celebrated," she notes, adding that the past year has seen major commitments from individual donors. "We've had foundations who are increasing their support. Even in the climate we're facing, there are corporate sponsors who are stepping up and doing more where they can."

Under Nicholls' leadership at the Montrose Center since August 2024, events like the 2024 Out for Good Gala and this year's Pride Brunch broke records in both attendance and donations. "There's been a lot of momentum in the past year," she says. "I'm really excited to see that keep snowballing and moving forward."

Nicholls joined the Montrose Center after nearly 15 years of fundraising experience for prominent Houston institutions. A major figure in Houston's LGBTQ philanthropic community, Nicholls previously held leadership positions at the Houston Grand Opera, Theatre Under The Stars, and Allies in Hope (formerly AIDS Foundation Houston).

Her path to becoming a fundraiser in Houston was "completely accidental," Nicholls says. After graduating from high school, the Sacramento, California, native attended UC Santa Barbara and received a bachelor's degree in English. Her degree initially led her to teaching English in Costa Rica, where she also met her future wife.

"We were both teachers in Costa Rica and became very fast friends," Nicholls remembers. "After moving back to the States, my dad passed away. I was back in California looking for something different, and she said, 'Why don't you come to Houston with me?' We then became more than friends, and the rest is history."

The couple has been together for ten years, and married for five.

While living in Houston, Nicholls organically met a director of development who was looking for a grant writer. "That's how I got my foot in the development door," Nicholls says. "Once I started doing that, I was introduced to galas, special events, and interacting with donors. I just instantly fell in love with it."

On being voted this year's Leading Female Fundraiser, Nicholls says she feels incredibly humbled and gives credit to the rest of her team. "To be recognized just really means a lot to me. I have to give a huge thanks to my colleagues at the Montrose Center because any fundraiser is only as good as their CEO, the development team behind them, and the colleagues who do the work every day to make it all possible."

Looking forward, Nicholls plans on continuing her work to secure donations for the essential programs the Center provides to LGBTQ Houstonians.

"In the climate that we, as the LGBTQ community, are facing, it's challenging and stressful," she says. "I hope the community knows that the Montrose Center has been here for almost 50 years and will continue to be here with supportive programs and services. There is hope beyond this. Our community has fought the fight before, and we will continue fighting now."

Nora Dayton

This celebrated photographer uses her work to help people connect with each other.

By LOURDES ZAVALETA
Photos by NORA DAYTON

Just three years ago, photographer Nora Dayton (she/her) picked up her camera to capture a local community gathering for the first time. Since then, she has become a leading voice behind the lens, documenting Houston's most significant social and political movements.

Her recent work includes capturing Pride Houston 365's 2025 parade and festival in downtown, the No Kings Rally and March at Houston City Hall, and the congressional redistricting hearing at the University of Houston. This powerful body of work has earned Dayton the title of this year's Gayest & Greatest Favorite Female Community Photographer.

"It's humbling to be seen, and it's an honor to feel that I'm touching people's lives in some way," says Dayton on winning the award. "Even if it's in just some small way, it means that people are seeing and appreciating my work and that it's left a positive impression on them."

That's what I really want—to put something out there that makes people feel good."

Dayton, who works in software development, moved to Houston's Montrose neighborhood from New Jersey in 2019 after her wife landed a job at the University of Houston's medical school. "The Montrose area was an environment where it felt like there wasn't judgment," she says. "My experience in the area was just a greater diversity of people, and I think that helped me figure myself out."

After social-distancing restrictions had eased in 2022, she decided to attend an in-person event hosted by the social organization Trans & Gender Queer Houston (TGQH). "I had virtual support groups," she says, "but that was my first time getting out into the community and meeting other people."

Dayton soon became friends with TGQH founder Meghan Fairbanks and began photographing the organization's events. "I got a lot of positive feedback from that very quickly," she remembers. "The second time I took photos at a TGQH event, I got some good photos, and one of them is still the banner on the group's Facebook. It kind of just went from there."

In addition to TGQH, some of the groups Dayton is passionate about and has photographed are the human-rights organizations Equality Texas, 50501 Houston, and Triple A Alliance. She was also the lead photographer during Pride Houston 365's 2025 season, capturing its major events such as the grand-marshal reception, Rock the Runway, and the Pride festival and parade.

At a time when Texas's LGBTQ community—and particularly trans Texans—face relentless political and social attacks, Dayton's images depict queer joy and resistance. She says this work is therapeutic for her. "When things are really down or feeling bad, I think to myself, 'I want to put something beautiful into the world.'"

She says another important part of her work has been her ability to help people connect with each other. "There was a school teacher who shared that they were starting the school year in a conservative district, so they were hesitant to share much about themselves. After the teacher's co-workers saw some photos online that Dayton had taken of the teacher at events, their colleagues reached out and said they wanted to get involved in similar causes."

"That's been some of the most meaningful stuff—seeing people I took photos of use those photos as their profile pictures on social media," Dayton says. "That feels good to me, because I gave someone a photo where they felt good about how they saw themselves."

Krewe of Olympus

Houston's LGBTQ Mardi Gras organization celebrates 53 years of giving.

By BRANDON WOLF

Houston's Krewe of Olympus—one of the nation's largest LGBTQ Mardi Gras krewes—embodies a spirit of exuberance. Its members embrace a social scene adorned in rhinestones, sequins, and feathers. This lively community is marked by camaraderie, great parties, and a commitment to raising money for Houston's LGBTQ community. The organization is now celebrating its 53rd anniversary.

Founded in 1970 as a gay krewe in New Orleans, members began to hold an annual black-tie ball, showcasing elaborate campy costumes that required months of preparation. The name Olympus alludes to the fictional New Orleans carnival ball featured in the 1938 Bette Davis film Jezebel.

For years, Houston lacked its own krewes, prompting many local gay men to travel to New Orleans for the Olympus ball. But by 1992, the AIDS crisis left the New Orleans Krewe with only three surviving members. To revitalize the organization, husbands Bill and Ben Jones-Walters guided the Krewe's relocation to Houston, breathing new life into its traditions.

The Krewe's hallmark lavish costumes are usually built in segments in order to transport them to the ball site. A Krewe motto is "If it's worth being done, it's worth being overdone."

Memorable costumes from past balls include a Tiki Room bar complete with parrots singing in unison, and a dramatic Statue of Liberty descending from her pedestal.

Since 1970, the group has hosted its annual ball every year—except for two years during COVID. The Krewe measures its age by the number of balls held, making this its 53rd year. Past ball themes have ranged from "Illuminations" and "Just Desserts" to "Hell and Heaven," and "Cocktail Culture." Each year, a king and queen of the ball are chosen. The ball is usually held two weeks before the New Orleans celebration of Mardi Gras so that members are able to attend the New Orleans event and also the Galveston event.

Despite meticulous planning, the event is not without its amusing mishaps. Members have contended with back braces throwing them off balance, prematurely popped costume balloons, and wobbly headdresses. Each member's headdress is built upon a custom-fitted skullcap, designed to fit snugly without the use of chin straps.

President David Gandy has announced that the 2026 ball will be held at the Wyndham Houston near NRG Stadium on January 31. Gandy has been a member for over three decades and has served as the fundraising chair for 14 years.

The event usually attracts about 400 guests. Attendance is by invitation only, so the best way to see a show is to become friends with Krewe members—who each have a specific number of invitations they can give out.

Beyond the ball, the Krewe hosts a variety of other social events throughout the year. Annual fundraisers include a Twelfth Night celebration with king cake, Witchy Bitchy with Halloween-themed food, and Fais Do Do featuring homemade Creole food.

Members also construct prize-winning floats for Houston's Pride parade and sell beads and flags at the Pride festival. Additional social gatherings include happy-hour parties at local clubs, rush parties, restaurant group dinners, and quarterly membership meetings.

The Krewe of Olympus has always been open to men of all races, and since the 1980s, women have also been welcomed. Heterosexuals are likewise welcome to join. Membership applications can be downloaded at the Krewe website.

Members can choose their level of involvement, with greater participation yielding rewards such as preferred seating at the annual ball. At a minimum, members are expected to pay dues and serve on one committee.

Over the years, the Krewe has donated nearly a million dollars to local LGBTQ organizations. Beneficiaries have included the PFLAG/HATCH Youth Scholarship Foundation, The Pet Patrol Houston, PWA Holiday Charities, Q-Patrol, Omega House, Texas United Charities, Bering Open Gate, Heart of Leather Foundation, AssistHers, Bayou City Performing Arts, Bering Omega Community Services, Colt 45 AIDS Troublefund, Montrose Clinic, Art League Houston, Legacy Community Health Pharmacy, Lesbian Health Initiative, the LGBT Switchboard, and Allies in Hope's Camp Hope.

Halloween
Fantasy
BallHouston's beloved
Halloween party returns.

By CONNOR BEHRENS

DALTON DEHART

This October marks the return of the legendary Fantasy Ball, a larger-than-life celebration of community, creativity, and extravagant costumes. And behind the curtain of this iconic LGBTQ event is president Robert Wallace, a community leader who has not only preserved the magic, but reignited it.

"I think it makes me really proud," Wallace says, reflecting on OutSmart readers naming the Fantasy Ball their favorite LGBTQ non-benefit event of the year. "The Halloween Ball has been around for 44 years, but it kind of lost some momentum, particularly during COVID. I took over the organization and tried to put some steam back into it. And now, we haven't even sent out the invitations yet and I've already gotten multiple requests from people asking how to get in."

First held in 1980, the Halloween Ball has become one of the longest-running queer traditions in Houston. After a dip in attendance and energy during the pandemic, Wallace stepped in to ensure its legacy endured and thrived. His vision was rooted in preserving the spirit of the event, rather than reinventing it.

"We've tried not to make too many changes," he says. "We tweak things year to year to improve what didn't work, but overall, the event is pretty much the same. It starts relatively early, which people like. They can come to the Ball and then head to other Halloween parties afterward."

Held at South Beach, the newly reopened Montrose nightclub, the Ball is both a dance-floor extravaganza and a dazzling display of imagination. Last year, roughly 1,000 guests packed the venue—a sea of glitter, wigs, latex, and lace—as DJ Chad Guidry spun tracks that moved through the decades, offering a little something for everyone.

"Chad's been DJing with us for four years now," Wallace says. "People really enjoy his music. It's fun, remix-heavy, and very pop."

But the Fantasy Ball is more than music and dancing. It's a night where self-expression reigns supreme, and guests come dressed to impress. "I enjoy keeping an eye on the door that first hour," Wallace says. "It's unbelievable the amount of energy and time that people spend on their costumes. You may not even recognize someone you know."

While individual creativity at the event is plentiful, Wallace particularly enjoys the group costumes. "One year we did Alice in Wonderland," he recalls. "We had over 20 people dressed as characters. Last year we did a classical Disney theme. Another group did 101 Dalmatians—one woman came as Cruella with over a dozen friends dressed as Dalmatian puppies."

Despite all the pageantry, Wallace is quick to clarify what the event is and isn't. "There's no fundraising aspect," he says. "And that's by design. The hosts really enjoy it just being a party. So many LGBTQ events are fundraisers, and while that's important, this is different. It's about fun, connection, and community."

The impact that Wallace has had on Houston's LGBTQ scene extends beyond Halloween. He also founded the city's Pride Brunch fundraiser, which has grown into a can't-miss Pride weekend staple that supports the Montrose Center.

"There was nothing happening on Sundays during Pride," he explains. "In other cities, Pride is a full weekend—Friday, Saturday, Sunday. Here it was just two days. So I pulled together my friends for brunch, and it just grew. Now it's a fundraiser for the Montrose Center, which I love working with."

That balance between celebration and service reflects Wallace's broader vision for Houston's queer community—a vision of inclusion, continuity, and joy.

As the Fantasy Ball approaches its 45th anniversary, Wallace is mindful of the importance of sustaining the legacy for future generations. He credits the event's longevity to its dedicated hosts, some of whom have been involved since the 1980s. "This is their party," he says. "They're really dedicated to making it a success."

When asked what he hopes guests take away from the night, Wallace doesn't hesitate with his answer: "I hope they walk away knowing they had a great time!"

ARTS

The Happening

The Orange Show's experimental arts showcase.

By BRETT CULLUM

The Happening at the Orange Show, a winner of the Best Performing Arts Organization honor, is one of the wildest and most difficult things to describe. When asked what it is, the trans man who hosts and organizes The Happening, Andrew Whit, simply states, "It's an experimental and performance-art showcase that happens at the Orange Show the last Friday of every month, from January through October. It is actually the Orange Show's second-largest self-produced and funded event, second only to the Art Car experience."

Typically, they gather together six or seven different "acts," and the audience wanders around a warehouse or parts of the Orange Show on Munger Street, where anything can happen. You could see puppets, poets, musical acts, or anything else the performance-art rebels of Houston can dream up.

Whit says, "The Happening started in the Orange Show Monument itself, but that has been closed for the last year for renovation. This moved us into the Orange Show headquarters, which is a large pavilion-style warehouse located right behind the monument. We are in the second generation of the Happening, which was actually founded by Alex Lechin. Alex was a University of Houston student pursuing her Master of Arts degree, and she started volunteering at the Orange Show by helping with restoration work. She developed a relationship with them, and she had this vision for doing performance and experimental art.

If you are unfamiliar with The Orange Show, you are not alone. Uber drivers and Houstonians often have no idea what this folk museum and brightly colored tribute to kitsch is, but The Happening has put the place firmly on the map with its monthly shows. Whit muses, "We're on our 32nd show now, so when you multiply the math out, and you think about how many artists and how many audience members came to the Orange Show for their first time through the doors of The Happening as an active program, that's really something very special. The Orange Show is really blossoming. It's like a big orange blossom now!"

When asked how he describes his role, Whit responds, "Now I work as the creative director, which I absolutely love. I've been doing it for over a year now, and it's amazing to get to collaborate with so many artists each month. I also usually host the event. In the past, The Happening would have rotating hosts. But in an effort to allocate more of the budget for the performing artists, I took on the hosting position myself."

The Happening is a unique experience every time. "No two Happenings are ever the same," says Whit with a shrug. "To describe The Happening as one event would be really hard, but I can give you an example of what a recent Happening was like. We had a witch's circle, and then a photo shoot. There was an album release, and then a cardboard puppet show! Then we had Dr. Aisen, who is an experimental artist and also a medical doctor who designs medical equipment, get up on stage and play experimental music. In between songs, she pulled out a syringe and injected these two pearls with something that was unknown to the audience. Then at the end of the show, we found out that she had married two female eggs together and inseminated them. You can bring people in for kind of a surprise experience—they're there for one thing, but then they can be introduced to another."

Contemplating how The Happening has become so much a part of the fabric of the community, Whit says, "Art is queer. It's strange in nature; strange people do it. Think about the kind of person who would make a cardboard puppet show and spend time doing that! I would never go so far as to say that you have to be queer to be an artist, but it helps. It's a historically safe environment. It's always artists and queers together. Whatever you want to think about art history, they've always been married together. The Happening wasn't conceptualized as a queer event, and it's not marketed as a queer event. It's just a byproduct of who's reaching out and who the movers and shakers are right now in our cultural landscape."

The Happening at The Orange Show is definitely happening, and it's certainly one of our Gayest & Greatest events!

Duewa “Kaya” Spicer

Infinite Zen Therapy focuses on queer empowerment.

By BRANDON WOLF

Duewa “Kaya” Spicer, 51, who identifies as queer and non-binary, is a licensed clinical social worker and certified sex therapist who founded Infinite

Zen Therapy in 2018. Spicer’s boutique practice is dedicated to honoring the complexities of human experiences, particularly those that are frequently ignored or stigmatized. Their therapeutic philosophy focuses on examining areas such as desire, loneliness, and personal boundaries, thereby fostering opportunities for meaningful self-awareness and transformative growth.

Infinite Zen Therapy is inspired by the concept of Zen, with an emphasis on finding peace amid life’s chaos. As a queer nonbinary individual, Spicer is acutely aware of the need to cultivate tranquility, especially in today’s dark environments that feel hostile and unsafe. They advocate for embracing vitality and joy, which might mean attending a sex party, sharing intimacy, or engaging in self-pleasure. This inclusive perspective is reflected in Infinite Zen’s commitment to celebrating erotic energy, kink, non-monogamy, and the diverse spectrum of human identity and relationships.

Spicer’s approach is rooted in the belief that no one is broken; instead, everyone is continually becoming. They view therapy as a process of reclaiming pleasure, freedom, and a belief in one’s wholeness. They aim to provide a shame-free, pleasure-centered space that is rich in inclusivity. They welcome gender, erotic, and relational diversity. Clients are encouraged to be curious, explore what feels good, and heal from past wounds by reconnecting with their bodies and communities as sources of joy.

Central to Spicer’s work is helping people understand the intersections of desire, pleasure, identity, and relationships. They pride themselves on slowing down the therapeutic process, allowing clients room to reflect, process, and grow. Spicer acts as a guide rather than a “healer” by helping clients navigate their beliefs and narratives surrounding sexuality, intimacy, sexual function, and pleasure. Many clients experience deep emotional releases, realizing their identities and desires are valid and worthy of acceptance. Spicer normalizes these experiences, helping clients embrace their sexuality and the happiness that comes from connecting with their bodies.

Spicer also focuses on demystifying and destigmatizing sexual interests and fantasies. When clients share unconventional desires—such as wanting to embody a puppy—Spicer responds with acceptance and reassurance, reminding them that these feelings are not unusual. This affirming approach helps clients feel seen and understood, fostering a sense of belonging and permission to explore their authentic selves.

Spicer’s journey into sex therapy was inspired by childhood experiences, notably the influence of Dr. Ruth Westheimer, a sweet television personality known for her candid and accepting discussions about sex. This openness contrasts sharply with Spicer’s upbringing in a conservative Sunni Muslim household where sexuality was rarely discussed. Motivated by Dr. Ruth’s example, Spicer became a frequent library visitor, exploring books about sex, anatomy, and psychology—a pursuit they kept secret from their mother.

Identifying as a tomboy from a young age, Spicer challenged traditional gender norms, preferring activities like climbing trees and playing with bugs. After leaving home at 17 and coming out as queer at 19, Spicer found community in local gay bars and gradually developed a deeper understanding of their gender identity, coming out as nonbinary at 43.

Spicer believes life is a continuous journey of becoming, with each individual constantly evolving. This perspective shapes Infinite Zen Therapy’s therapeutic approach and its supportive environment.

On World Mental Health Day, October 10, Spicer uses social media to remind people they are not alone, and to promote self-care. They emphasize the importance of reconnecting with friends, family, and community, as well as encouraging the pursuit of pleasure in everyday moments. Spicer likens this to savoring ice cream—fully experiencing its flavors and sensations—and urges clients to embrace these “mmm” moments as often as possible, highlighting the value of slowing down and cherishing simple joys.

Chanel Chowdhury

The former sports-bar server finds queer community behind the bar at Pearl.

By CONNOR BEHRENS

Chanel Chowdhury never expected bartending to become her passion. Years ago, she was just a server at a sports bar, not yet knowing that bartending would soon change her life.

"Eventually, I was trained to bartend," she says. "I immediately fell in love with it. It made me more social, and I loved getting to discover all kinds of fun cocktails I could make. I'm very passionate about helping people find their new go-to drink."

But it wasn't just the drinks. It was the people, the connections, the way she came out of her shell one shot at a time. That journey led her to Pearl Bar, one of the last remaining lesbian bars in Texas.

"Even before I worked here, Pearl was a safe space for me," she says.

Chowdhury was recently crowned Favorite Female Bartender in OutSmart's 2025 Gayest & Greatest Readers' Choice Awards. She explains that the award couldn't have happened without the support of her team at Pearl.

"I'm so grateful for this award," she says. "And shoutout to the best boss, Julie Mabry, for creating such a welcoming space. This is honestly such an amazing validation. It really healed that inner queer child inside of me. Young Chanel would be so proud. I am so unapologetically queer, and I'm so grateful for this award!"

At Pearl, Chowdhury has become part of the bar's heartbeat, helping to keep its legacy alive while pouring shots and shaking drinks. "We deserve more lesbian bars in the US," she says, "but I'm so grateful Pearl is surviving and thriving."

Chowdhury's passion for community is just as strong as her love for mixology. On Wednesday nights, the bar comes alive with drag-king shows, a personal favorite of hers. The themes change weekly—from nostalgic '90s nights to spooky horror themes—and Chowdhury curates themed drink menus to match.

"It's such a blast," she says. "We put on a hell of a show every Wednesday!"

Then on Thursdays? A whole different kind of magic.

"Julie, our amazing owner, makes a hell of a steak for Steak Night," Chowdhury says. "And then there's free drag bingo and, yes, dildo races. It's wild. You've gotta come see it for yourself!"

But it's not all laughs, games, and cock-tails. For Chowdhury, bartending is also about connection. One night, she met a fellow "desi" (South Asian) lesbian at the bar. "We started chatting about life and what it was like growing up lesbian and Muslim," she says. "I told her it had been years since I'd had a homemade Bengali or Indian meal."

A few weeks later, that same woman brought her a plate of home-cooked food. "It was such a sweet moment, and it was delicious," Chowdhury says.

Outside the bar, Chowdhury is just as vibrant. Her house regularly hosts intense board game nights with friends who take competition as seriously as she does. "We can go for hours," she says.

She also loves reading, true-crime shows, anything a little spooky, and camping. "I keep a tent in my trunk at all times, just in case!" she says. Clearly the kind of person who is always ready for adventure.

Chowdhury's love for her community doesn't stop at the bar. She actively supports organizations like The Trevor Project, Tony's Place, The Montrose Center, and DeQH (Desi Queer Helpline).

As for the future? Chowdhury says she will continue being unapologetically herself and helping keep the spirit of Pearl alive.

"Long live Pearl Bar," she concludes. "And here's to hoping for more lesbian bars to open across Texas and the US. If you haven't been to Pearl yet, come by. We'll make you feel right at home."

Cleo Roasting Co. and Cavo Coffee

Vivian Nguyen and William De Lorenzo's business is a West University staple.

Cleo Roasting's head roaster Vivian Nguyen

Houston's coffee lovers have been buzzing over Cleo Roasting Co. and its sister café, Cavo Coffee, crowning them as the winner of Favorite Coffee Roaster and Favorite Coffee Shop, respectively, in 2025's Gayest & Greatest Readers' Choice Awards. At the heart of both victories is a shared mission of making coffee about building a community, and not just providing our daily caffeine fix.

For Cleo Roasting's head roaster Vivian Nguyen, better known as Vi (they/them), coffee is both a craft and a calling. "I source my coffees seasonally, making sure that everything is in season and fresh. As the head roaster, my role involves sourcing and profiling the green coffee, which means creating the roasting profiles for espresso, filter coffee, and single-origin coffees," Vi explains. "Also, I host cuppings, or tastings.

"Then I lead my team in doing the production roasting, so we're turning green coffee brown and highlighting the characteristics of the coffee itself."

Founded in 2018, Cleo has become a West University neighborhood fiacture. "We are a local roasting company on Bissonnet at Kirby," Vi shares. "We're very community-oriented. We are a big staple in West University, and we are just here to serve our community coffee, waking up our neighborhood one cup at a time."

That sense of responsibility extends to sourcing practices, which purposefully depend heavily on women producers. "I believe that women coffee producers need to be highlighted," Vi emphasizes. "Our industry is male dominated, from producers all the way down the chain to being a barista. I don't know many roasters here in Houston, or at all, who aren't men. There's so much hard work that goes into growing coffee, and I think it's important to share the love. All of the money that we invest in our green coffees makes a huge impact, all the way back to the countries of origin."

Cleo's commitment to sustainability also sets them apart. "Our product comes in renewable packaging," Vi says. "Our retail bottles can be returned empty for a dollar off the next bottle of coffee. It is something that is important to us, as we don't want to put more waste in this world than what we are already doing."

Next door at Cavo Coffee, general manager William De Lorenzo sees the connection between Cleo's ethical roasting and the café's mission of community care. "Probably about 90% of our staff are in the LGBTQ community," he notes. "We really focus on making it obvious that we are a safe place for queer people. We have Pride flags hanging around the shop, and we're all pretty queer. We host events for queer people."

Recognition from OutSmart readers left William in shock. "It means that we are doing the right thing and we're visible to the people who it's important for us to be visible to. I feel like we're a little blip on the radar in Houston coffee. There's so many great coffee shops, and I don't really know of any other queer-run ones, honestly. But it tells us that we're headed in the right direction."

For customers, the connection between Cavo and Cleo is tangible. "Our clients really like that they can literally turn their head to the left from the register and see where their coffee is coming from," William said. "They like that they can watch it being produced, and they like that it's traveling just 15 feet to get into their hands."

Both Vi and William see these Gayest & Greatest honors not as accolades, but as affirmations of their deeper mission. "I want to put us out there as a safe space for queers to gather, to enjoy a good-ass cup of coffee, and just to turn off for five seconds," Vi says.

William echoes that sentiment. "Cavo is an extension of our living room, basically, and we treat it like that. Everybody is welcome here," he adds. "We have sat while guests cried on our shoulders because of big life events. We don't make the business the forefront. It is about the community connection and the community involvement, and making sure that the people on the other side of the counter don't feel like they're just a wallet."

In Houston's ever-growing coffee landscape, Cleo Roasting Co. and Cavo Coffee stand out not just for what's in the cup, but for the care behind every pour.

City Cellars HTX

Daniel Wolfe's East End restaurant features a prime skyline view.

FAVORITE
RESTAURANT

Executive chef Antonette Wright

In the vibrant culinary landscape of Houston's East End, City Cellars HTX is celebrating being named the Favorite New Restaurant and Favorite Restaurant for Outdoor Dining by OutSmart readers in this year's Reader's Choice Awards. The restaurant also secured a finalist spot for Favorite Brunch, solidifying its reputation as a must-visit dining destination.

For owner Daniel Wolfe, the restaurant's location near Buffalo Bayou is the perfect backdrop for its success. "I first created the concept of City Cellars without knowing how everything would come together. The name, the scenery, the location—you couldn't ask for a better home run," Wolfe says. He literally stumbled upon the spot that would become their new home by dropping a map pin on a vacant lot and telling his broker, "Hey, figure out who to get in touch with. I want a tour."

The new location offered not only a stunning skyline view (which executive chef Antonette Wright calls her favorite part of the job), but also the flexibility to build a custom kitchen. "We designed the kitchen the way we wanted, instead of having to retrofit," Wolfe explains. This meticulous planning ensured consistency for a team that is dedicated to serving food that will "taste the same every single time," regardless of who is in the kitchen.

At the heart of City Cellars HTX is a commitment to scratch-cooking and robust flavor, a philosophy that Chef Wright traces back to her childhood. She started cooking as a child, learning by feel from her mother and grandmother, whose signature dish was lemon meringue pie. That family favorite is still a work in progress in the City Cellars kitchen.

Today, Chef Wright describes her culinary vision as a blend of "Cajun Southern brunch with a couple of worldly touches from my travels" and a steadfast commitment to quality. "If she wouldn't serve it to her mama, she's not going to put her out on a plate that comes out here," Wolfe proudly notes.

"I like to joke around and say the only thing we don't make here is the mayo and ketchup," Chef Wright says, estimating that the kitchen is about 85% scratch in order to deliver a superior dining experience.

The brunch menu is a particular standout, with items like their massive Brunch Charcuterie Board. "It's a massive board, 46 inches by about 14 inches wide. It's designed to turn your head when you see it come out of the kitchen," says Wright, noting that it takes two servers to carry it to the tables.

Wright, who has a degree in hotel and restaurant management and culinary arts training from HCC, takes pride in her unique creations. She took six months to perfect the recipe for the bourbon bacon jam on their beef and bacon sliders, and she loves to cook with alcohol when making creations like the rum glaze on her jerk salmon.

For Wolfe and Wright, the Reader's Choice awards are a sign that their efforts to support the community are being recognized.

"Personally, it's my first time getting an award like this. Being a part of the community and being recognized as a member of the community, it touched my heart a little bit," Wright shares. "Professionally, I feel like it's very important. I know we're going to reach a lot of people in the community. Working with Daniel, who is an ally of the LGBTQ community, is really nice. Everybody here is free to be themselves."

Wolfe sees supporting the community as a foundation of the City Cellars business model. "Small business owners are the backbone of a community," he states, pointing to the restaurant's policy of supporting various LGBTQ causes. They have also received a Greater Houston LGBTQ+ Chamber of Commerce GrubHub grant for two years in a row.

"I think that for business owners, highlighting the community is often a talking point. But actually walking the walk is what I really try to focus on. We're going to walk the walk, and this award is just the proof of the pudding. That's what we say, and we mean it."

LEGAL & FINANCIAL SERVICES

Eric Kirkpatrick

His compassionate approach to injury law is informed by a broad legal background.

By BRANDON WOLF

Eric Kirkpatrick, 49, has received this year's Favorite Male Personal Injury Attorney award, a recognition of his expertise and dedication to advocating for his clients. Throughout his career, Kirkpatrick has become a dependable advocate for individuals affected by car accidents, truck crashes, and workplace injuries, driven by his mission to help people recover from life's unexpected hardships. "People reach out to us when they're hurt," he says. "We do everything we can to help them get back on their feet."

Kirkpatrick's legal perspective is informed by experience on both sides of the courtroom. For a decade, he defended insurance companies and their clients but found the work increasingly unsatisfying, noting that insurers often treated claimants coldly. "People were just seen as another claim, not as individuals with real lives that had been disrupted," he recalls. Realizing he was "on the wrong side of justice," Kirkpatrick decided to represent individuals instead of corporations.

Empathy is central to Kirkpatrick's practice, and he understands the hardships that clients face after an injury. "When someone is injured on the job due to someone else's negligence, it's not just an injury. They often lose their job, their health insurance, and their lives can fall apart." Coming from a working-class family—his father a police officer and his mother a Walmart employee—Kirkpatrick relates personally to his clients' struggles.

In 2014, he opened his own practice to help individuals stand up to powerful insurance companies. "I'd rather represent the person who was injured and needs someone to fight for them," he says. His goal is to level the playing field and secure the compensation his clients need for recovery and justice.

Kirkpatrick's commitment to his clients goes beyond legal victories; he believes in building genuine relationships. He visits clients' homes and meets their families, making sure they feel seen as people, not just cases. "By the time a case is over, my clients feel like family. I keep in touch—even texting them on their birthdays," he shares.

At his firm, the environment is personal and collaborative. "When you come to me, I'll sit down with you to review your case and introduce you to the team who will be collaborating with you," he explains. This supportive approach helps clients feel comfortable and empowered during challenging times.

As an openly gay man, Kirkpatrick is particularly attentive to the unique needs of LGBTQ clients. Many seek out his firm for its respectful and understanding atmosphere. "We deal with sensitive issues, including medical records and privacy concerns. Some clients may be HIV-positive or not want their sexual orientation disclosed. I make sure to protect their privacy and keep such information out of cases whenever possible. It's important that every client feels safe and respected."

Kirkpatrick's advocacy extends beyond his own practice. He has been active in the Stonewall Law Association of Greater Houston since 2014, is a member of the Houston Bar Association, and serves on the board of the LGBT Caucus of the American Association for Justice. He also serves as a board member for both the Texas Trial Lawyers Association and the Houston Trial Lawyers Association, demonstrating ongoing leadership and commitment to the legal community.

Family is central to Kirkpatrick's life and work. His husband, Mitch, is a paralegal who manages the office, and their Maltipoo, Sadie, brings comfort to both staff and clients.

Looking back, Kirkpatrick is grateful for a career that allows him to make a difference. "I love what I do, and I'm thankful that I have the freedom to choose the cases I take on," he reflects.

"Making a positive difference in people's lives is what drives me. Every case is a new opportunity to learn new facts, solve legal puzzles, and stand up for people who need someone in their corner. Through compassion and expertise, Eric Kirkpatrick continues to make a meaningful impact—one client and one case at a time.

A MOUNTAINTOP EXPERIENCE

Jess and Trish Golden hiked up a mountain trail in Washington State for their intimate wedding.

by DAVID CLARKE

Jess (l) and Trish Golden

When Jess and Trish Golden met on Hinge, neither expected that a last-minute swipe would change the course of their lives. “I was literally inside the app’s settings and about to delete it, and I get this notification. I see her face, and then I was done,” Jess recalls. “I literally told my best friend, ‘I think this woman is going to either destroy my life entirely—and I’m going to let her—or she’s just forever. And I have not even spoken to her once.’”

That instant spark was mutual. “That night, Jess pretty much messaged me and said all these things like, ‘Hey, this is what’s going on in my life.’ And I replied, ‘Ditto,’” Trish says with a warm laugh.

Jess, 37 (they/them), grew up in Galveston, while Trish, 36 (she/her), was born in the Philippines and moved to Houston at age 12. Today, they call suburban Humble home. Both brought the weight of previous marriages to men into their new relationship, which made openness feel essential from the start.

“It’s always been something that’s definitely scared a lot of people away,” Jess says of their brutal honesty. “But after some deep therapy, I was like, ‘What’s the point? I just need to be real with everything, everyone, and myself.’”

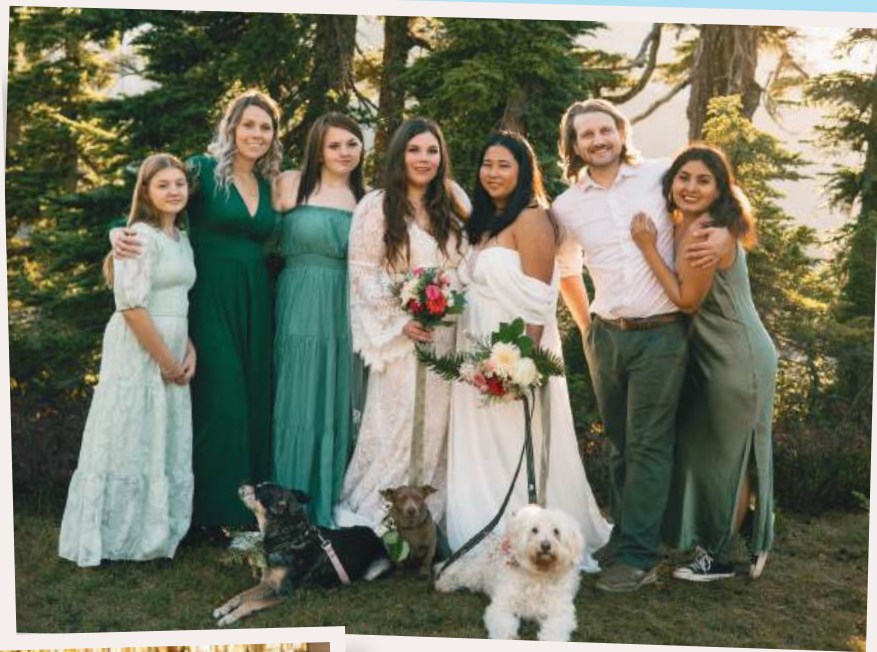

“Jess was just honest from the get-go,” Trish adds. “So I was like, Oh wow, there’s no hiding in this person. I appreciated that.”

Their first date came together almost by accident. “We planned to have our first date on a Friday,” Trish remembers. “It just happened that we were both free on Thursday. So we decided to meet up at Flower Child in The Woodlands.”

After dinner, Trish visited Jess’s apartment, where she met the dogs and got an early glimpse into the shared life to come. It wasn’t long before they both realized that something deeper was forming.

“The first time I actually felt it in a physical sense was when I had to go to Galveston for an engagement session,” Jess says. “She had a normal job. And as a photographer, when do I work? On weekends. So I said, ‘If you want to hang out, you’re going to have to come work with me sometimes.’ Just the fact that she was willing to come to work with me, be my assistant, and just be all in made me think, ‘Yeah, I’m in love with you.’”

“That’s when I felt it, too,” Trish agrees. “I saw how much you cared about your clients and other people. And then I thought, ‘I can only imagine how much you would care about the person you love.’”

By 2023, it was time for double proposals. “For a year straight, I pretended to propose to her nonstop because I’m really bad at lying,” Jess admits. “It was basically me pretending so I could prep myself to hide the ring and get ready to propose.”

On Marriage Equality Day, after photographing dozens of couples at the Travis County Clerk’s office, Jess finally popped the question. “I started getting down on one knee, and she said, ‘What are you doing? No, stop,’” Jess laughs. “This whole time, I had been pretending. And then she realized it was real because there was a ring that time.”

Once they had arrived home that evening, Trish wasn’t about to let Jess have the last word. “Jess went out to CVS, and then I set up the apartment with candles,” she recalls. “I’m more intimate when it comes to those things. So I did it in a more private way in our apartment with candles.”

The couple’s wedding ceremony was on September 22, 2024, at Artist Point in Washington State. “We got married on that mountain,” Jess explains. “I chose it because we’re artists, and we had to hike to our little spot. It was beautiful.”

The day felt serendipitous. “It was supposed to rain that day, so we were like, ‘Oh, we should move it.’ Then it turned out it was a perfect day because by the afternoon, the sun peeped out,” Trish recalls.

“It literally started casting this beautiful golden light on us as soon as we started,” Jess adds. “We had all of our dogs with us. They walked us down the aisle.”

Their photographer and close friend Erica Bonorden, along with her husband, Tom (who officiated), were both an integral part of their special day. Jess’ sister and her children rounded out the intimate group.

Their wedding was filled with unique details. “I’m a Pokémon nerd,” Jess admits. “In the actual ceremony itself, Tom included some Pokémon references. That was super-cute.”

They also sourced flowers from a Seattle market, designed floral collars for their dogs, and drove their self-built van named Ghosty from Texas to Washington. “That was also an adventure in itself,” Trish adds, “just taking off work for two weeks and driving from Texas to Washington.”

After exchanging vows, the newlyweds cooked dinner for their guests. “My favorite part was coming back to the Airbnb and cooking dinner in our wedding dresses for Erica, Tom, my sister, and her two kids,” Jess says. “We made ‘Marry Me Chicken.’”

“I thought that was very unique,” Trish adds, “to make our own food for our own wedding for our own guests.”

As people who work in the wedding industry, the couple offers some advice to others. “Find vendors and people that actually support you, number one,” Jess emphasizes. “Number two: do what you want, because at the end of the day you truly can have a meaningful experience that feels like you—versus trying to please the masses.”

For Trish, the joy is in repetition. “I tell Jess that I would marry her anywhere, any time, no matter how many times she wants to get married. We’ll renew our vows, probably eventually at Dolomite.”

At the heart of their story is a celebration of authenticity. “Once you truly just unmask yourself and realize that you’ve never been too much and you never were too little, you can truly find healing in the people that accept you. And it’s okay to have boundaries for the people who don’t accept you,” Jess reflects.

Theirs is truly a love rooted in honesty, adventure, and joy—and a special passion for climbing mountains.

GAY SOFTBALL WORLD SERIES PLAYERS PARTY AT 713 MUSIC HALL SEPTEMBER 22, 2025

Houston welcomed thousands of athletes this September as host of the Gay Softball World Series (GSWS), the nation's largest annual LGBTQ sporting event organized by the North American Gay Amateur Athletic Alliance. The week kicked off with the Opening Stampede at 713 Music Hall, where players from across North America mingled to DJ Easton's high-energy set. Host Nina West channeled Dolly Parton, while Miss Gay America 2024 Dessie Love-Blake brought the crowd to its feet. Three anthems—Black, US, and Canadian—underscored the night's spirit of inclusion. Council Member Mario Castillo welcomed teams with a proclamation from Mayor John Whitmire. The evening also honored the Montrose Softball League Association and their four-decade legacy of promoting queer athletics in Houston.

Libra Season Sets the Tone for October

Planetary changes inspire growth, truth-telling, and balance.

With the sun moving through Libra (the sign of harmony, balance, and reflection) this month, relationships and balance in our lives is strong. We are more thoughtful as we are prioritizing our sense of self-care and personal safety. We will all be more compassionate, especially by mid-month. Although the sun starts the month in Libra, it enters Scorpio on the 22nd. Mercury exits Libra and coasts into Scorpio on the 6th and Sagittarius on the 29th. Our ideas are flowing. Venus begins in Virgo, but soon enters Libra, her home sign, on the 13th. We are shy in Virgo but more outgoing in Libra. Mars travels through Scorpio, his home sign, all month. We keep our guard up with Mars. Good days this month are the 8th, 14th, 25th, 29th, and 30th. Extra-busy days when we need to pay more attention are the 1st, 4th, 6th, 7th, 11th, 13th, 17th, 19th, 23rd and the 24th.

ARIES (Mar. 21–Apr. 19)

As you start the month, relationships are the main topic for you. You are rethinking your past actions and choices. This can be a time when you may feel that you are “stuck” and can’t move forward either way. Some of this remains strong through March of 2026. You remain open to others’ points of view, but you are listening closely to understand their core motives despite their outward appearances. You are also reviewing your current career path and rethinking that as well! There are changing conditions with friends and business associates. This can be a very good time to network and increase your connections with people who share your views. In the latter part of the month, you are paying more attention to people’s actions and attitudes. You see through to the truth much easier.

TAURUS (Apr. 20–May 20)

You are continuing to make changes in your life relating to your career, where you live, your partnerships, and yourself! As the month begins, you are more aware of your working conditions, as well as your relationships with fellow workers. You are wanting to improve and detoxify your workspace. This can be a very good time to update your home office, as well. For some, this can be a time to start your own thing, and for others it may be a time to cut back or even retire. You are tired of the old ways of doing things, and you need some new motivation and interest. In the latter part of the month, you are much more direct with others, especially those with whom you have an established relationship. This can be a good time to renew your bonds or choose to travel a different path.

GEMINI (May 21–June 21)

With Uranus (the planet of freedom of choice) in your sign, you are looking for things that really interest you. Uranus often pushes back against tradition and obligation, and this is impacting you in all areas of life—self, home, relationships, and career. It’s easy to feel bored and trapped with Uranus, which gives you the motivation to change. This month, you are looking to be more personally creative, have more fun, and enjoy the company of your children. This can also be a good time to take what you enjoy doing and making that your business! In the latter part of the month, you are paying more attention to your health, speaking up, and improving your work conditions. You may feel more pressured, as you may experience a time restraint to get your work completed. Relationships will be an important topic in November.

CANCER (June 22–July 22)

Home, family, and emotional and financial security are highlighted this month for you. This is an important time to spend with family. This is a great time for family reunions, creating your own family, and making your home a more peaceful place. Some of you may be remodeling or even relocating. Emotional harmony and balance is what you are expecting. This can be a very good time for upgrading your education, expanding your communication outlets (via social media or podcasting), and writing a book. In the latter half of the month, you are more creative. You will want to make an investment of time and money into something you really enjoy. This could also be an alternative career path for the future. This is a year of opportunities, so don’t miss them!

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22)

Overall, you are continuing to revise all parts of your life. This will impact family, career, and relationships. You may be clearing out things and detoxing yourself. Relationships may take on more importance and may help you see yourself more clearly. You are paying more attention to your daily life, how things affect your direction, and expressing your views more and more. Although you always try to be nice and polite, you are still wanting to get your message across. You are not as patient with your comments as you have been. Getting your finances in order is also important, and you may be looking for ways to cut back or get rid of unnecessary expenses. At home, you are doing some repairs or cleanup. There could be troubles in the family, but you will continue to address that through the end of the month until it is solved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22)

You Virgo folk are also reviewing your life choices, from career to where you live and who you are partnering with. This may make some of you start your own business, change your partnerships, and even relocate. This is a restless time for Virgos, and you may have extra mental activity that keeps you from resting as well as you usually do. Finances are a primary concern this month. This is a better time for investments, obtaining a loan, increasing your resource base, giving yourself more credit for the work you do, and setting up a budget. You don’t mind spending the money, but it must be a long-term investment. Relationships are better this month, as people are more open to you. This is a better time to market yourself and your skills. You have been more direct in your communications, and that will continue through the middle of next month. If they don’t get it, you are ready to do it yourself!

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 23)

This is your yearly personal cycle, your birthday month—always a time of review and looking at new goals for the next year. This is the month to make yourself the most important person in your life. Health and work routines are important topics this month. You have been working to make your workplace more comfortable and more peaceful. A home-office situation is better for you now than it had been before. This is also a great month to start any kind of health or exercise plan. In partnerships, you are more open to talk about making things smoother—business or personal. In the latter part of the month, finances take the spotlight. Your impulse spending is still strong. You may be reviewing your investments or exploring ways to make more money and cut back on expenses. You are also more aware of people’s motives in the latter part of the month. Make sure you have a place where you can retreat!

SCORPIO (Oct. 24–Nov. 21)

This is an interesting month of diverse energies. On your yearly cycle, this is normally a time of rest and retreat, stepping back and having some personal time for yourself. However, Mars, the ruler of Scorpio, is traveling through your sign. Mars is the planet of action, so you may be trying to do two different things at the same time. Certainly the focus of the month is you, so it's a great time to focus on your needs and allow others to take care of themselves. You may have times when you can push ahead and other times when you must retreat. You are more in touch with the spirit world this month. This can be better for soul work, past-life regression, and considering what the universe wants from you. Make sure you have time for your own creativity and sense of play!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21)

In the first part of the month, you are more social, connecting with friends and colleagues and helping your community to improve. Home and family issues have resurfaced again. You may need to be looking at downsizing, relocating, or finding something that fits your needs. You may feel that you are in a push/pull time of uncertainty. This energy will be around until March of 2026. You will have more clarity after the end of November. Relationships are flowing more this month. This is a great time to advertise your services, explore a raise or promotion. The latter part of the month is the time for some rest and relaxation. This is a better time for self-care and enjoying some down time. In the beginning of November, you will get a big boost of energy to get you moving!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19)

This has been a time of indecision for you. You can clearly see what needs to be done, but you can't seem to get yourself in gear to make it happen. And this is impacting all the important areas of your life such as career, relationships, and where you live. Career activities, in particular, are highlighted this month. This is a time for you to take a leadership role in some of your activities. You may also be looking to change career directions, start something on your own, or cut back and focus on things you really enjoy. In the latter part of the month, you are more active with your friends, colleagues, and business organizations. This can be a very stimulating experience that opens you up to new ideas and perspectives. Relationships continue to improve, although you are somewhat undecided about where it is going. You will be clearer at the end of the year.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18)

As with many of the other fixed signs—Leo, Taurus, and Scorpio—you are going through a time when you are looking at career, relationships, and home and wondering which area you are going to clean up first. From now until December, you are making progress in these areas. Your tolerance for difficult relationships is over. If you aren't happy, you are considering taking action. You are in a more philosophical mood as the month begins, and you are just looking at the bigger picture and assessing. In the latter part of the month, you are more direct and determined. You will want to take a leadership role at work. Your tolerance and patience is very low, and you are ready to let others know about it. This is more of a social time for you that is better for travel, international business, and promoting your services. It is also a better time for exercise to burn off some of this extra energy so you can sleep better!

PISCES (Feb. 19–Mar. 20)

As this month begins, you are back into your indecisiveness, pondering the best action that you might take. There are the long-term plans you are considering. This can affect your career, your relationship, and your personal boundaries. In the first part of the month, you are exploring the deeper side of commitment, trust, and safety in relationships. This is also a good month to get a handle on your finances, investments, and debts. In the latter part of the month, you are ready for a break. This is a better time for travel, continuing education, and working with an international business. At the end of the month and in early November, you get a big boost of energy and will be connecting with people from your past during that time. You are ready to act, and your tolerance is low!

BEST NEW DRAG KING

It's that age old question: Where's the beef? It turns out, it's right here in Houston with entertainer Beau Vine. You'd better Moo-ve over, because this king is trotting up the ranks with more fanfare than a Houston Livestock Show & Rodeo trail ride. He was named OutSmart magazine's "Best New Drag King" this year, and for good reason. He's sexy and domineering, and when he seduces you it may be hard to keep your calves together. Find out more about this prizewinner below.

Pronouns? He/Him

Inner Avatar? A chill cow

Hometown? Houston or Conroe

Drag birthday? November 6, 2024

Story behind the stage name?

Beef is my favorite protein, and cows are my favorite animal, so I wanted to play into that part. Sir Loin was taken, so I had to figure something out.

What got you interested in drag?

A local competition, S.L.U.T.S., run by Iris Seymour. I was just a supportive observer when one of my friends was a competitor. It looked like something I'd want to do.

Describe your performing persona.

Not too different from myself—goofy, playful, a bit dense, and decently energetic. And one could say bull-headed.

Ultimate goal as a performer?

To blow up, then act like I don't know anybody! But actually, to be able to perform and put myself out there in a way I'm proud of. Like I want to do big things, but I want to be happy with what I'm putting out consistently.

Thoughts about legislation restricting drag performances?

To be absolutely real, I think it's cringe. Targeting such a small group of people for no reason is stupid, and I think lawmakers should really put their focus on something worthwhile for their constituents—like health care, food, and natural disasters.

Follow Beau Vine
@beau_vinehtx
on Instagram,
@Best_Yeethaw on Twitter and Tiktok.

What are your favorite hangout spots?

My house, Ripcord, and various parks.

Share about your drag family?

My drag father is Juecee and my mother is Mari Jane. They're really cool people. Definitely check them out.

Describe your aesthetic.

Part '70s rocker, part cow, part cowboy. It varies, for sure.

What's your must-have clothing accessory or prop?

Usually a hat of some kind, but also a small silver chain that my best friend gave me in 2021. I don't go a single day without it.

What advice would you share with your younger self?

Keep on doing what you're doing, little dude. You'll figure it out.

What would people be surprised to know about you?

Probably that I used to be a mime. That doesn't come up too often.

Any advice for up-and-coming performers?

Do what is going to make you happy, and never stop learning. Only you can improve yourself.

What do you do in your downtime?

I play video games, D&D, board games, and read. A lot of my hobbies are really nerdy.

Your dream job as a child?

I wanted to be a chemist up until middle school, when I switched to being a chef.

Which candy or dessert would best describe you, and why?

Probably a hot mango cobbler with ice cream on top, 'cause I like to have a classic vibe with a twist.

What is your secret talent?

Being able to speedrun Minecraft. Most of my skills and talents are known or on display. I mean, I can also walk in hooves—but not heels.

Where do you normally perform?

It varies based on the week, month, day, and hour. The best way to find me is to follow my socials because I post all of my performances.
